ever, be the means of materially ameliorating the later inconvenience. A small rivulet runs by the village and falls into the river Don, near Aboyne village; and a detached part of the parish is watered by the Don.
Branches, respectively, of the Union Bank of Scotland, and the Aberdeen Banking Company, have been lately established in this burgh; and a sheriff's small-debt court is held here four times a year, when claims are adjudicated to the amount of £8. 6s. 8d., or under.
Fairs are held on the Wednesday next before the 5th of January, the last Wednesday in February, the Wednesday before the 26th of May, and the Friday after the last Tuesday in June (o.s.); on the Friday after

Old Rhavne, and Tuesday and Wednesday after the 22nd of November (n.s.); and at Migvie a fair is held on the second Tuesday in March, (o.s.).

COULL is a parish in the district of Marr—the Kirk is about thirty miles from Aberdeen; lying at the head of Strathcromar, and separated from the Dee on the south by Aboyne. It is a finely sheltered tract of land triangular in shape, and generally fertile; the hilly portions being, however, bleak and pastoral. The ruins of the very old castle of Coull are distinguish-able, but of its ancient possessors little is known.

LEOCHEL AND CUSHNIE are united in one parish, and contain two ancient castles, now in ruins, called Lintark and Corseg; in the latter were born several of the Forbes', one of whom (Patrick Forbes, of Corseg) wrote a commentary on the Revelations.
Craigievar, the elegant seat of Sir William Forbes, is also in this parish, and from its elevated situation commands an extensive prospect of the country. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in March, and the

TURRIFF AND KING EDWARD,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF NEW BYTH.

TURRIFF is a free burgh of barony, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the parish of that name; 34 mi. S. N. W. of Aberdeen, 17 S. N. W. of Melburn, and 11 S. E. of Banff; situate on a tributary stream of the Deveron, near that river. Its charter, dated the 10th of March, 1511, was granted by James IV. in favour of Thomas Dickson, prebend of Turriff; by this, the inhabitants were entitled to hold a weekly market on the sabbath day, and three fairs annually, each to continue eight days. A sheriff's small-debts' court, is held quarterly in the town's-house, and justice of peace courts, as occasion may require, in the same building. Turriff is one of the most flourishing little towns in the north of Aberdeenshire; the place is clean and neat, and gas-lighted by a joint-stock company, formed in 1837. In the same year, a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland was established here, and subsequently two other banks have been engaged in the monetary transactions of the place. There are also two good inns and posting-houses—the 'Turriff Hotel' particularly is an admirably conducted one. The manufacture of woollen fabrics of the coarser kind is carried on here to some extent, and there are bleach works doing a respectable business.

The places of worship are, a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an Episcopalian chapel; and the schools are, a parochial one, and a private academy, in which boarders are received. The vicinage of Turriff is of an agreeable character, and the neighbourhood is very respectable, and several families of distinction are among the residents. Forglan House, the seat of Sir Robert Abercromby, Bart., a few miles distant, is perhaps one of the most elegant and imposing mansions in the north of Scotland. Fairs are held on the last Tuesdays in the months of January, March, May and July, and the first Tuesday in December; in addition to which, there are eleven moveable markets held in the year.

KING EDWARD, properly Ken-Edar, a parish in the northern part of the county, is twelve miles in length from east to west, by from two to five in breadth; its western extremity being washed by the Deveron—on the north it is bounded by Gamrie, on the east by Fyvie, and on the south by Montquhitter and Turriff. The general surface is hilly and bathy, and not more than half the soil is arable; there are, however, extensive plantations, and the district is progressively improving. A streamlet, tributary to the Deveron, pursues a westerly direction through the parish; on its right bank stands the ruin of the ancient castle of Ken-Edar, once the seat of the potent Earl of Buchan. Within the south-eastern border is situate NEW BYTH, a village formed in the course of the last century.

POST OFFICE, TURRIFF, Mr. Francis Souter, Post Master.—Letters from all parts SOUTH, arrive (from ABERDEEN) every forenoon at five minutes past eleven, and afternoon at five minutes before two, and are de-patched thereto at half-past eight in the morning, and afternoon at four.

Letters from parts NORTH and WEST arrive (from BANFF) every morning at half-past eight, and afternoon at four, and are de-patched there to every forenoon, at five minutes past eleven, and afternoon at five minutes before two.

ARGYLESHIRE,

OR, as it is frequently written Argyllshire, is a large county in the south-western extremity of the Highlands. What may be termed the continental part is bounded on the north by Invernessshire; on the east by that county, by Perthshire and Dumbartonshire; and on the south and west by bays and straits of the Atlantic Ocean. Its extreme length is one hundred and fifteen miles; its breadth averaging about thirty-three; and it has not less than six hundred miles of coast washed by the sea. The mainland, including the peninsula of Kintyre, has been computed to contain 2,735 square miles; while the islands connected with it are supposed to comprise 1,063 more: whereby the whole extent of land in Argyleshire may be estimated at 3,800 square miles. The county is divided into six principal districts—ARGYLE PROPER, COWAL, ISLAY, KINTYRE (or CANTYRE), LORN and MULL. Cowal is divided from Dumbartonshire by Loch Long, and bounded by Loch Fyne on the west; betwixt Loch Fyne and Loch Linnhe, and stretching away to the north, is Lorn; from which, on its south-west quarter, there extends, in a southerly direction into the Irish sea, the peninsula of Kintyre. The islands of Mull, Jura, and Islay, are divided from the continent, or from each other, merely by narrow sounds; and may be taken from their proximity and accessibility, as little else than portions of the mainland, surrounded by salt-water rivers. There are other districts of inferior size, as Mull of Galloway, Mull of Kintyre, as Ardnamurchan, the most westerly point of Sunart; Appin, on the north, lying on Loch Linnhe; Glenorchy, another portion of Lorn on its eastern side, and Knapdale, occupying a position between Kintyre and Nether Lorn.

EARLY HISTORY.—This county, together with that of Perth, is presumed to have constituted the ancient Caledonian kingdom, while the Romans and Picts were in possession of the greater part of Scotland. In former ages the western coast of Argyleshire was perpetually exposed to the descents and depredations of the Danes and the Irish, but the original inhabitants never suffered them to penetrate any considerable distance into the interior: if an enemy landed, or as seen hovering on the coast, in the course of a few hours the whole country was alarmed, and the men repaired to the shore completely armed. The heroes celebrated by Ossian were a militia, established in Argyleshire, for the purpose of defending the country in any sudden emergency. Of old the chieftain was considered the father, rather than the master of his clan; his followers loved him with a degree of enthusiasm, which made them cheerfully undergo any fatigue or danger; and it was his interest, as well as his pride and glory, to requite so animated an adherence to the utmost of his power. The rent paid him was chiefly consumed in feasts given at the habitations of his tenants; on these occasions they all lived together as friends, and the departure of the chief always occasioned regret. The cattle and corn, formerly consumed at these feasts of hospitality, were, in more polished times, required to be brought to the landlord's mansion, and thus friendship degenerated into oppression. Campbell of Auchinbreck had anciently a right to carry off the best cow he could find, upon several properties, each Martinmas, by way of mart—the island of Islay paid five hundred such cows yearly; but this badge of slavery has been converted into a modus of twenty shillings a head. The system of tending this state, arose from the petty quarrels between neighbouring clans, and the violence and disorder, and absurd points of fantastical honour. At this period the Scottish king, by his authority over this part of the country; the M'Donalds of the Isles assuming royal powers, holding parliaments, and enacting laws, until the Bruces brought the disorderly clans into some kind of subordination. From this time, in their different wars with the English, the chiefs had recourse to the assistance of the Highlanders, with whom and the inhabitants of the low country, they contracted debts, rendering the condition of the middle classes worse, as the chiefs found it necessary to require an addition to their yearly revenue, and, in order to enforce obedience, reference was had to penal laws. In this respect the king was obliged to gratify his feudal barons; for they were always formidable to his throne. But when the laws presented an obstacle to their rapacious exactions, they openly set them at defiance: they erected gibbets, and hanged their tenants without trial or mercy. The evil became at last so flagrant, that a jury, a sheriff or sheriff, were introduced; but this measure did not remove the mischief; for the sheriff was not infrequently bribed to spare a real culprit, while the poorer, and more innocent, were considered fit subjects for the gallows. In 1748 these abominable jurisdictions were totally abolished; and no sooner were men emancipated from their fetters, than they began to improve their properties; and since that time, the face and condition of this country has undergone the happiest change. The ancient inhabitants of the Highlands of Argyleshire prided themselves on their endurance of hunger and fatigue; they were passionately fond of music and poetry; and the song and the dance soon made them forget their toils. Now the sound of the bagpipe is more rarely heard; the taste for poetry has disappeared; the deer have abandoned the mountains, and extensive forests are either converted into sheep walks, or have succumbed to modern cultivation.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The surface of this county is, like most other parts of the Highlands, mountainous, bleak, and uncomfortable to the view; hills, rocks, and huge mountains, rise upon each other in stupendous and fearful disorder. Glencroe and Glencoe, are perhaps, amongst the most awfully picturesque valleys that can be contemplated. The coast is rocky, but indented with navigable bays, and islets, which afford good harbours for shipping. The vales and flat parts are cultivated; the mountains feed great quantities of sheep and black cattle; the woods, of which there are still some, principally in the Breadalbane district, afford shelter to deer and other game, while much wealth is got in the bowels of the mountains, which contain mines of lead, copper, &c., with extensive quarries of slate—of the latter, the most considerable, perhaps, are wrought in Appin district, at Easdale; in Seil Island, and Balachelish, the Island of Islay, &c. In the beginning of the eighteenth century, much of the natural wood was cut up and sold by the proprietors, at prices by no means proportionate to the injury perpetrated upon the face of the country; despoiling it of one of its most interesting features, finding, in the introduction of modern plantations, but a meagre substitute for the noble forest tree. The county, altogether, abounds more in romantic scenes than fertile plains and wood-clad hills. The number of acres in tillage bear an insignificant proportion to those occupied by pasture, wood, hills, lakes and rivers. The CLIMATE of the lower parts of Argyleshire is mild and temperate, but in the upper inland districts, the atmosphere is severe. On the tops of many of the hills the snow often lies for months, chilling the air, and giving the country a cheerless wintry aspect, even in tolerably mild opening weather. In the sinuosities of the valleys the air is of a more bland nature, these places being protected from the north and north-west winds, and having generally a southerly exposure. The central districts are more subject to rains than the coast, from the proximity of high hills, whose summits attract and break the clouds from the Atlantic. The most considerable elevations in Argyleshire are, Beininturk, 2,170; Sliagaol, 2,228; Benaeaton, 2,306; Seur Choinick, 2,364; Beinima, 2,389; Creach Bein, 2,439; Paps of Jura, 2,476; Bennabna, 2,515; Buchael Etive, 2,537; Benreispoll, 2,661; Benanambran, 2,720; Scur Dhonuill, 2,730; Bein-more, 2,980; Cruachlassa, 3,000, and Cruachan, 3,390 feet, respectively, above the sea.

The MANUFACTURES of Argyleshire are yet in so feeble a state as to be scarcely worthy of notice. The principal article made on a large scale for exportation is whisky, which is of a remarkably fine quality; there are distilleries in several parts of the county, for which Glasgow is the dépôt. From the peculiar form and watery intersection of this county, the communication between its insular and mainland portions has been greatly facilitated by steam power navigation; and now a very considerable number of steam vessels are constantly employed in conveying passengers and goods to and fro throughout the county, and in transporting the country produce to Glasgow. There is not, at the present day, a bay, a loch, or inlet, but holds a daily or commands a weekly communication with the Lowlands, and the several districts of the country. By this means the farmers are encouraged to fatten stock which they would never otherwise think of rearing. Steam boats are, in short, the lively causes of every kind of improvement in this county, and in agriculture changes are yearly witnessed in the different districts, from the modern improvements in husbandry.

RIVERS AND LAKES.—The county is well watered by rivers (not considerable), brooks and lochs, which abound with fish. Loch Fyne is celebrated as furnishing the best herrings of any found on the coast of Scotland, and it was estimated, that there were caught, in this arm of the sea, from twenty to thirty thousand barrels annually; but the 'take' has greatly fallen off in later years. Loch Aw (pronounced Loch O), is a beautiful fresh-water lake, about twenty-eight miles long and from one to two broad, reckoned the most picturesque lake of any in the Highlands, and possesses many lovely woody islets, among which are seen the ruins of several old castles; its waters, which abound with salmon, trout and eel, discharge themselves into Loch Etive, a branch of the Atlantic Ocean, at Bunaw Ferry.

ECCLIESIASTICAL DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This extensive county is divided, ecclesiastically, into not more than fifty parishes, which contain only two Royal Burghs, INVERARAY, at the head of Loch Fyne, and CAMPBELTOWN, in Kintyre, the former of which is a station of the circuit court of judicary. One member is returned to parliament for the county; the contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented), are CAMPBELTOWN, INVERARAY and OBAN. The present member for the county is Duncan McNeill, Esq. The Duke of Argyll is the proprietor of a large portion of the shire; and he is the chief of the family of Campbell, a surname which is found over the whole region, among high and low. The lordship of Campbell was elevated to the earldom of Argyll in 1457 by James III.; to a Marquisate in 1641 by Charles I.; and to a Dukedom in 1701 by William III.

According to the returns, made under the census, taken in March, 1851, the population of the county was 83,467; and the decrease is ascribed to the tide of emigration flowing from this, as well as some other Scottish counties.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Argyleshire, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £27,93; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1843, to £261,919. 12s. 11d.

APPIN AND BALACHELISH SOUTH,

WITH THE ISLAND OF LISMORE, PORT RAMSEY, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

APPIN, or, as it is more generally called, PORT APPIN, is a small village, in the united parish of Lismore and Appin, and comprised in a district of the latter appellation; situated on the point of a small promontory, on the eastern shore of Loch Linnhe; 13 miles n. of Oban, 15 n. w. of Bonawe, 35 n. w. of Inveraray, 136 n. w. of Edinburgh, and 29 s. s. w. of Fort William. The parish is of great extent, chiefly occupied as grazing farms; but the village contains very few houses, and is a mile and a half off the main road. Three miles to the north is Appin House, the seat of the late R. Downie, Esq. of Appin, whose mansion is surrounded by some of the finest timber on this coast—the Misses Downie are now the occupants. The church is nearly two miles north of the village, and there is a parliamentary church at nine miles distant, in the same direction, on the way to Balachelish South. On a small island near Portnacrosch, full two miles north, is the ancient and partly dilapidated castle of Stalker; it is nearly square, of considerable height, and evidently has been a place of some strength; and though its area is not extensive, it occupies almost a moiety of the little islet on which it stands. About half a mile from Stalker Castle, on the island of Shuna, are the still more ruinous remains of another fortress of this description. A fair, formerly held at Port Appin on the Friday before Martinmas, now possesses but little attraction; there is another well attended fair, however, for black cattle, held at Shian-ferry, nearly three miles to the south, on the 15th May and the 12th November.

BALACHELISH SOUTH is a straggling but populous village, on the south shore of Loch Leven, about three miles east of Balachelish Ferry (in the same parish), and 15½ n. of Port Appin. Near the village, at the foot of the Glencoe hills, are the extensive slate quarries of the Messrs. Stuart (wrought by the proprietor, Charles Stuart, Esq. of Balachelish, under the firm of Dugald and Charles Stuart), who export annually from 12,000 to 15,000 tons of this article to all parts of Scotland and the north of England; it is a blue slate, and of a quality equal to any produced in Britain; there is a convenient quay for its shipment, and in connexion with the works there are four hundred men employed; there is also an excellent granite quarry on the same property. Within a mile of the quarries, westward, is an Episcopalian chapel; and a small one for Roman Catholics, erected in 1836, stands at a short distance from the village. About a mile above the quarries, on the margin of Loch Leven, near the opening of a glen exceedingly wild and romantic, and almost embosomed by trees, is the residence of Captain Sutherland; and opposite, on the north shore of the loch (which is here fully a mile broad), in the county of Inverness, is Callart, the modern mansion of Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart. of Fassfern and Callart, contributing in an eminent degree to the beauty of the landscape. At Balachelish South ferry is a very comfortable inn and posting house; and in the immediate vicinity, at the entrance of a sequestered valley, is Balachelish House, the residence of Charles Stuart, Esq.; westward three miles from which is Ardsheal, the seat of Major Robert Stewart.

LISMORE is an island in Loch Linnhe, twelve miles in length by about two in breadth; it lies between Appin and Morven, and belongs to the same united parish with the former place. Great quantities of excellent lime, as well as oats and potatoes, are exported from hence. There is a small village on this isolated fertile spot, called PORT RAMSEY; and at the southern point, on a ridge of rocks projecting some distance into the channel, stands a lighthouse, almost in a direct line between Oban and the sound of Mull; the light is on a high round pillar of stone masonry, and is an excellent and most useful beacon. On this island are also a church, the remains of Doune or Auchindoune castle, and the ruins of a Danish fort.

POST OFFICE, STRATH OF APPIN, Donald M'Leod, Post Master.—Letters arrive from BONAWE and the SOUTH every evening at half past eight, and are despatched about ten at night. POST OFFICE, BALACHELISH SOUTH, Colin M'Donald, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive about eight in the morning, and are despatched about four in the afternoon.

BONAWE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BONAWE or Bunawe is a small scattered village, on the river Awe; 122 miles N.W. of Edinburgh, 80 N.W. of Glasgow, 12 E. of Oban, and 20 N. of Inveraray by Port Sonachan ferry—but round the head of Loch Awe by Dalnally, avoiding the ferry, it is 32 miles. The Lorn Furnace Company have an establishment here for making pig iron: the ore is of a peculiar kind, imported by the company from the district of Furness, in Lancashire; and is smelted entirely with charcoal, made in the neighbourhood from the timber produced on a large tract of country held by the company on a long lease: it is said to be the only furnace in Scotland heated solely by charcoal, and the iron is considered equal to any smelted in the kingdom. The company employ about three hundred men in connexion with their works. Bonawe is also much celebrated for its salmon fishery, which affords employment to a considerable number of persons in the fishing season. Large quantities of the fish are sent fresh, in boxes, to Glasgow, and other parts of Scotland—as well as pickled, sealed in jars, and kits or firkins, for the London market.

The church, which was erected in 1827-8, stands about half a mile above the iron furnace, near the road to Inveraray, where also is the parish school: the funds for both these structures were supplied by the munificence of General D. Campbell, of Locknell. Near the church is the Taynult Inn, a comfortable and convenient house, between Inveraray and Oban; and at Ardochattan, about four miles N.W. on the opposite side of Loch Elive, stand the remains of an ancient priory of the Benedictines; the venerable mansion of S. Topham, Esq., of Ardochattan, is situate on a part of the site of the priory. A new church was completed at Ardochattan in 1836, at an expense to the heritors of about 1,000*l.*, and containing sittings for four hundred. The objects that most forcibly strike the attention here are Loch Elive and Ben Cruachan: the latter, with his broad shoulders, rearing his blunt-pointed summit nearly 3,400 feet above the salt water that laves his foot. It is about five miles from the Taynult Inn to the top of this stupendous eminence; and, although the journey is somewhat fatiguing, the view obtained from the summit will amply reward the tourist for the trouble of ascending to it.

CAMPBELTOWN,

WITH SALT-PANS, SADDLE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CAMPBELTOWN is a royal burgh and sea port 144 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh, and 100 S.W. of Glasgow, by sea, but by land the distance to either city is greater by 36 miles; 76 S. S. W. of Inveraray, 37 S. of Tarbert, and 10 N. of Southend; beautifully seated on a fine bay or inlet of the sea. It is a place of great antiquity, having been a royal residence so early as the fifth century, at which period Fergus the first king of Scotland fixed his residence here, and it continued the seat of his successors till 843. It was then called Dalruadhain, and a place on the north side of the present town is still known by that name, now written Dalaruan; but the appellation formerly applied to the site of modern Campbeltown was Ceann-Loch (i. e. the 'head of the loch'), by which name the country people still designate the town in Gaelic; the present name was given to it in honour of the Duke of Argyle, when it was made a royal burgh, in 1701. The town is sheltered on the north and south sides by lofty mountains, and has one of the safest harbours in the Western Highlands, possessing a depth of from three to fifteen fathoms at low water. The haven is spacious, being nearly two miles in length by one in breadth, and protected at its mouth by the Isle of Devar, which is joined to the main land on the south side by a bar of sand, visible at low water, nearly half a mile long—the entrance to the bay being from the north. There is a small lighthouse, with a brilliant light, on the south-eastern shore, opposite to the entrance, erected in 1821, and supported by the town; but a similar protection is much wanted on the Isle of Devar. On opening into the bay, the stranger's attention is arrested by the grand though wild scenery, particularly on the south side; and the prospect immediately comprises the neat local capital, Campbeltown, situate at the head of Loch Kilkerran; the public buildings are seen towering above the dwelling houses—beyond which the eye is carried for some distance over a fine, fertile, yet mountainous country. From the shore two quays project into the bay, so as to allow vessels to load and unload at low water: the principal one, appropriated to the convenience of steam boats and heavy vessels, was much improved in 1836, and is almost on a line with the Main-street; the other stretches from Shore-street; and there is a third quay on the opposite side of the loch, adjoining that part of the town called Dalintober.

Campbeltown formerly derived great advantage from the herring fishery, for which it was particularly famed; but since the withdrawal of the bounty it has almost gone to decay, few vessels being now engaged in the trade. The staple at the present time is distilling whisky, and in this branch upwards of twenty firms are engaged producing an article inferior perhaps to none in the kingdom, chiefly for the Glasgow and English houses. Next in consequence, and mainly, if not entirely dependent for its prosperity on the last named branch, is malting. Agriculture of late years has risen into great importance. Some of the finest and richest land in this part of Scotland lies to the north and west of the town, and is chiefly the property of the Duke of Argyll, and D. S. Galbraith and George Macneal, Esqrs. Two small woollen manufactures, a colliery, a tannery, rope walks, &c. add to the business importance of the place; whilst its neighbourhood abounds with lime, stone, &c. for building and other purposes. Few towns of the size of Campbeltown possess equal commercial advantages: there are a custom-house, an extensive excise establishment, and branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the Clydesdale Bank. Steam vessels sail regularly to Glasgow, Greenock, and Ayr, and occasionally to the adjacent coast towns, and to Londonderry, &c. in Ireland; and numerous coasting vessels are freighted to Liverpool, and other more distant parts of the empire, as well as to North America, &c. The principal exports are whisky, wool, herrings, live stock, salt, &c.; the imports are timber, grain, yeast, groceries, ironmongery, &c. The municipal government of the town is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and twelve councillors and combined with Ayr, Inveraray, Irvine, and Oban, returns one member to the Imperial parliament—the gentleman at present sitting is Lord James Crichton Stuart. The town is gas-lighted, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water, by pipes conducted from Crosshill, into the principal streets. The town hall, a convenient building, ornamented with a handsome spire, contains a council chamber, a sheriff's hall, and an assembly room.

PLACES OF WORSHIP, SCHOOLS, &c.—The Castle church, so called from its occupying the site of the ancient royal castle, was erected in 1781. The Gaelic church, so named from the language in which the service is performed, was built in 1807, and a beautiful stone spire added in 1836. The United Presbyterian church was erected in 1767, and is ornamented with a handsome and substantial stone tower, in the gothic style, raised in 1834. The Secession church was built in the latter year. The Episcopal church opened also in 1834, was at first occupied as a Secession church, but afterwards as a branch of the Scotch Episcopal church. The burgh and parochial school is an extensive and very useful institution, supported by the corporation and the heritors in the parish; the society for promoting christian knowledge have a school in the town, and another about five miles north; there are two schools of industry for girls; and the Dalintober boys and girls school, endowed by a Miss Lucy Campbell, in 1843.

The most remarkable piece of antiquity is an ancient cross, erected in the middle of the main street. The inscription is in the Saxon character, and the following is a literal copy, with the translation annexed.

Hæc est: crux: Domini: YVARI: M: H: EACHYRNA: quondam: Rectoris: de KYREGAN: et: Domini: ANDRE: nati: ejus: Rectoris de KIL: COMAN: qui hanc crucem fieri faciebat: * This is the cross of Mr. Edward M. H. Eachran, once Rector of Cyregan, and Master Andrew his son Rector of Kilcoman, who erected this cross.*

There is, however, no date, but it said to have been executed about the twelfth century, and to have been brought from the Isle of Iona. South of the town is the high mountain called Bengoellon, from which there is an extensive view of the neighbouring country, including the distant objects of Arran and Pladda islands, Cowall hills, the bay and heads of Ayr, the Lowlands as far as Loch Ryan, the Craig of Ailsa, Black Head at the entrance of Belfast Lough, Donnavertie, Sanda Isles, part of the Irish coast near the points of Garrouthead, Red Bay and Fair Head, the dangerous bay of Macrahanish, the Mull of Islay, and the Paps of Jura; also the cemetery at Kilkerran, with the points of Saddle, Carrdel and Skipness. As the north and south shores of Campbeltown are both pleasant and healthy, they are the residence of many respectable families; and in the neighbourhood the seats of D. S. Galbraith, G. Macneal, J. L. Stewart, and J. E. Campbell, Esqrs. deserve particular notice.

The market is held on Thursday, and the fairs on the first Thursday and the last Wednesday in February; the second and last Wednesday in May; the Wednesday before the second Thursday in August, and on the second Thursday in the same month; the Friday before Kilmichael market, in October, and the third Thursday in November.

SALT-PANS, so called from salt having been made here from sea water, is a small village, five miles west of Campbeltown, on the southern shore of Macrahanish bay, the dashing of whose waves can be heard to a great distance; and the continual heavy swell here, caused by the Atlantic rolling in between Islay and the northern coast of Ireland, is justly dreaded by the mariner. In the village is an excellent parochial school. Nearly half a mile south is 'Lossit House,' the tasteful and modern mansion of George Macneal Esq. of Ugadale; and a mile on the way to Campbeltown, at Drumleuan, is the Campbeltown colliery, the only work of the kind in the county: the coal lies in a bed of considerable thickness, is rather inferior in quality, and is conveyed in small boats, on a canal constructed on purpose, without locks, to Campbeltown.

SADDEL and SKIPNESS form a united parish, situate at the inner extremity of the peninsular of Kintyre—the village of Saddle being about ten miles north of Campbeltown. It contains the ancient castle of Somerled, the great chieftain and founder of the clan Macdonald; and the ruins of a monastery, of the Cistercian order, founded by Somerled in 1160. Saddle is now the family residence of D. S. Galbraith, Esq. whose mansion stands in a good situation, in the centre of this fine glen. The ancient castle, which is still entire, and the ruins of the monastery, in which is the cemetery of the ancient Macdonald family, are well worthy of being visited by the curious.

POST OFFICE. Main Street, CAMPBELTOWN, Alexander Lothian, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, and places SOUTH and NORTH arrive (from TARBERT) every morning at two, and from SOUTHEAST at half-past seven; and are despatched at half-past seven in the Evening.

AND BALLACHANTUIE, WITH THE ISLANDS OF GIGHA, CARA, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

CLACHAN is a village in the parish of Kilcalmonell, situated in a fine valley on the banks of a small stream, over which is a good stone bridge, and on the road from Tarbert to Campbeltown, 11 miles s. of the former, and 26 n. of the latter place. In the village is the parish church, a chapel for Independents, and the parochial school; and a little to the east is the neat residence of Alexander Morrison, Esq. of Balinakill, who is proprietor of the village. In the vicinity, to the north-west, is a vitrified fort on a large scale, and another contiguous fortification in ruins; and among the hills to the east are several beautiful fresh water lochs, well stored with trout. Seven miles south, on the same road, and near the coast, is

TAYENLOANE, a small village in the parish of Killean: about half a mile in a northern direction is the mansion of the late Sir Charles M. Lockhart, Bart.; and opposite the village, but separated from the main land by a sound about four miles broad, is the island of GIGHA, which is nearly six miles long, and from two to three broad; it is the property of the Honourable A. H. M'Donald Morton.

CARA, a neighbouring island, which is about one mile in length, is the property of the Hon. A. H. M'Donald Morton, who acquired both it and Gigha by marriage with one of the Misses Lockhart.

POST OFFICE, CLACHAN, John Cook, Post Master.—Letters from GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, and the SOUTH, arrive (from TARBERT) every afternoon at three, and are despatched thereto at seven in the morning. Letters from CAMPBELTOWN arrive every morning at seven, and are despatched at three in the afternoon

KILLEAN is about four miles south of Tayenloane. Near the road stands the parish church, a small neat stone building, erected in 1787, and the parochial school. Seals are very frequently seen lying on the rocks near this coast. Nearly three miles south from Killean, and twelve north of Campbeltown, is the village of GLENBARR, situated on the banks of the Barr water (which is well stocked with fine salmon and trout), and nearly a mile from the shore, in a rich and well cultivated glen, is 'Barr House,' the property of Keith Macalister, Esq. a fine structure, built in the Gothic style, and from its site an extensive view of the sea and the north-east coast of Ireland may be obtained. Three miles s. of Glenbarr, and nine and a half n.w. of Campbeltown, on the main road near the shore, is BALLACHANTUIE, a small village in the united parish of Killean and Kilchenzie, containing a small church, erected in 1825. The road between this village and Campbeltown has been much improved of late years, and a new line, several miles in length, has been cut along the shore, at a great expense, to avoid the hills on the old road. The chief employment of the people on this coast is fishing and agriculture.

DUNOON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DUNOON and KILMUN is a parish, lying on the western shore of the frith of Clyde—the town of Dunoon, a thriving little one, is the principal place in the district of Cowal; 27 miles s.s.e. of Inverary, 21 s.s.w. of Strachur, and 7 s. of Kilmun: by sea it is 74 miles w. of Edinburgh, 30 w. of Glasgow, 10 n. of Rothesay, 8 w. of Greenock, and 4 w. of Gourock. Its prosperity may be mainly ascribed to the pleasant site it occupies, having in front the famed frith of Clyde, always studded with numerous sailing and steam vessels. The town extends over a considerable space; few of the streets, however, are as yet complete, but those of Argyle and Hillfoot already contain several buildings of a respectable order; and along the shore, for a distance of two miles in both directions, there are several ranges of genteel looking and well furnished houses, for the accommodation of families who resort thither in the summer season for sea bathing. (Any information connected with those to let may be obtained of the postmaster and the booksellers.) Intermixed with the lodging houses are many tasteful villas, chiefly occupied by the merchants and professionals of Glasgow, &c. for country retirement. It is only since the year 1821 that Dunoon has become a place of resort for sea-bathing; at that time there were only three slated houses in the place, and the population did not number above one hundred. In 1835 a wooden pier was constructed, three hundred feet long and twelve broad, with a projection, nearly at right angles with the end, ninety feet long and twenty broad: this substantial and convenient work cost £1,500. About a mile distant, at Kirn, is another pier, similarly constructed; and two miles north-east is Hunter's quay, a good stone building, with a projection and slip, erected in 1828. Nearly a mile further, at the entrance of Holy Loch, on its south-in shore, is 'Hafton House,' an elegant mansion, the property and family residence of James Hunter, Esq. of Hafton: this seat occupies a pleasant and picturesque situation, amidst thriving plantations and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds. In Holy Loch fifteen hundred vessels may ride in perfect safety, however boisterous the weather.

The parish church was built in 1816, and considerably enlarged in 1835, containing at present nearly nine hundred sittings; it is a Gothic edifice, with a square tower, and stands on an eminence in a conspicuous situation. A chapel of ease to Dunoon was erected near Toward highhouse, seven miles south-west, in 1836-7, by subscription; it is a neat Gothic structure, containing two hundred sittings, and cost £400. In 1828 a United Presbyterian church was founded in Argyle-street, with three hundred sittings—which, being found insufficient, a gallery was subsequently added. A Free Church, a Scotch Episcopal Church, and an English Episcopal Church—all neat buildings, are the other places of worship in the town and immediate neighbourhood—in which are also several public schools, and an excellent private one for boarding young ladies, conducted by the Misses Simpson. Fairs are held at Dunoon on the second Wednesdays in January, February, August, and October (o.s.), and on the last Tuesday in November.

POST OFFICE, Argyle-street, DUNOON, Daniel M'Phee, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from GLASGOW) every morning (Sunday excepted) at half-past nine and afternoon at four, and are despatched thereto at seven in the morning and half-past two in the afternoon.

EASDALE AND ITS VICINITY.

EASDALE is a village, partly situated on the island of its name, and partly on the island of Seil, from which it is separated by a narrow sound; it is 16 miles s. w. by s. of Oban, 30 n. s. w. of Lochgilphead, 40 w. of Inveraray, and 142 w. of Edinburgh. It is chiefly remarkable for its slate quarries, which are said to have been open above three centuries; they are the property of the Marquess of Breadalbane, and are wrought by the Nether Lorn Slate Company, who have, besides the quarries at Easdale, three others—two on the island of Luining, and one on the island of Seil, which, altogether, employ about two hundred and fifty men, and produce about 12 000 tons of slate annually, of a superior quality, which is exported to all parts of Scotland and the north of England. Several of the quarries, which are considerably below the sea, are kept dry by pumping with small steam engines. The geological formation of the slate-rock here is similar, as to stratification and cleavage, to the Welsh rock; and the island of Easdale, which is nearly a mile in circumference, is entirely formed of this rock, except a few trap dykes which here and there intersect it. There is a good quay for shipping the slate, and safe anchorage in the sound, through which the Glasgow steam boats pass almost daily to and from the north. Ardmaddy Castle, an ancient seat of the Breadalbane family, about two miles east of Easdale, is situated in a fine pleasant bay: the grounds are well wooded, and contain several pretty cascades. A marble quarry was wrought near the castle about eighty years ago; lead mines have been worked in the island of Luining, and there are several caves in Kilbride well worth visiting.

INVERARAY AND ITS VICINITY.

INVERARAY is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the county town of Argyleshire; 102 miles w. by n. of Edinburgh, 60 n. w. of Glasgow, 32 s. e. of Oban, by Port Sonachan ferry, and 42 by Dalnallyn, avoiding the ferry; 20 s. e. of Bonawe, by the before mentioned ferry, but 32 by the coach road and Dalnallyn, 24 n. e. of Lochgilphead, and 76 n. n. e. of Campbeltown. It is delightfully situated on the north-western shore of Loch Fyne, on a point of land ('Ardreanich' or 'the Fern Point') forming the southern side of a fine bay, which receives the waters of the Aray and the Shirra; the first has an elegant stone bridge of two arches, and is within half a mile of the town, the second is about  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile e., and is crossed by a bridge of one arch. From the former of these streams the town derives its name, 'Inver,' signifying the mouth—from its proximity to the mouth of the 'Aray.' A short distance from the town, at the extremity of the bay, stands Inveraray castle, the princely residence of the Duke of Argyll. The architecture of this mansion is highly finished gothic, with turrets at the angles, and its site particularly beautiful and commanding. From its southern front there is an expansive view for several miles down Loch Fyne, and of the adjacent lofty mountains, which are adorned with fine plantations to their summits. A square pavilion rising high above its turrets, supplies light to a gallery (which lead to all the upper chambers,) and a spacious hall, furnished with an elegant organ, and decorated with the arms used by the Argyleshire militia in 1745. Amongst the paintings, are those of the Earl who was executed in the reign of Charles II., and also the Marquess who suffered in that of James the VII. The drawing room, and some other apartments, are lined with rich and costly tapestry of rare designs—indeed the whole interior is fitted and furnished in sumptuous style. The castle also contains two beautiful pedestals of red granite, or porphyry, of a very rare kind, discovered about five years since by the present Duke, near the Ross of Mull: two slabs were sent to Aberdeen and converted into pedestals, in forming which, it was found to be much superior, and to take a higher polish than either the Peterhead or Aberdeen granite. The Duke of Sutherland subsequently procured a considerable quantity for the internal improvements of Dunrobin castle. On entering the bay, the castle has a very majestic appearance, and the woods, that, rising for a considerable distance, adorn the domain, give the town an appearance of grandeur. Every stranger is struck with the nearness of the town, which, though small, is well built, and some of the houses approach to elegance. The park and grounds of the castle present a drive, almost in a direct line, of above ten miles, with several others of great extent, all thrown open to the public. Upon the lawn is a brass gun, that belonged to the admiral's ship Florida, one of the 'Invincible armada,' blown up in Tobermory bay in 1588, where she was forced to put in through stress of weather. The gun, which was taken from the bay a few years ago, is about ten feet in length, and is fired upon certain occasions.

The chief business of this place is the herring fishery, a great proportion of the produce of which is sent to the Glasgow market. Loch Fyne terminates about nine miles above the town, and from the fineness of its scenery, and the richness of its herrings, is justly remarkable. The value of herrings taken out of the loch in a single season, until within the last two or three years, frequently amounted to £30,000, but of late years, not more than one-fourth of that amount has been realized. In prosperous seasons, there are at times, from three hundred to four hundred boats employed at once on its waters: the loch is fifty miles long, and is about ten broad below Loch Gilp, but seldom exceeding three above Otterferry. From a convenient part of the town, and projecting from the shore, is a well-built quay, which is intended to extend one hundred feet further into the bay, with the addition of a slip. In the town are two branch banks—one of the National Bank of Scotland, the other of the Union Bank of Scotland; there is a bank for savings, and a good inn; and at Dalnally is an excellent hotel and posting house—gentlemen frequenting which latter, have the privilege of fishing in the river Orkley and Loch-Awe, both celebrated for their salmon and trout. There is a daily communication with Glasgow throughout the year, by means of a steamer across Loch Fyne to Saint Catherine's, and also by the Castle Company's steam boats, which sail daily during the summer, and twice a week in the winter. Inveraray was erected into a burgh by charter, granted by Charles I. in 1648; and its government vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, with eleven councillors, a town clerk, and a treasurer. The burgh unites with CAMPBELTOWN and OBAN in this county, and with AYR and IRVINE in Ayrshire, in sending one member to parliament.—(See Campbeltown.) The court house and gaol forming a substantial building of stone, is situated on the shore, and has an imposing appearance when seen from the loch. In it a sheriff's court is held every Monday and Thursday, from the 15th May to the end of July, and from the 15th October to the 4th April; a justice of peace small debt court sits every Wednesday, and a borough court daily, during the above periods.

The places of worship are, a neat church of stone, (surmounted by a spire), situated in the main street, and in which service is performed both in Gaelic and English; a secession church erected in 1836, on land given by D. Paterson, Esq; and a neat free church built in 1844, at the south end of the town. A parochial burgh or grammar school, a female charity school, and a school of industry are supported by the munificence of the Duke and Dutchess of Argyle. About a mile and a half north-east of Inveraray is Glen-Shirra, in length about six miles; the scenery through which, is exceedingly beautiful—presenting gently-sloping hills, whose sides are clothed with wood, and rich meadow land, intersected with winding stream and lake; the whole furnishing a landscape of no ordinary beauty. About eight miles south of Inveraray, on the western bank of Loch Fyne, are the extensive granite quarries of Furnace, leased and wrought by Mr. William Sim. These quarries which employ generally one hundred and fifty men, furnish nearly the whole of the stone for paving the streets of Glasgow. At Goufield in the vicinity of Furnace, an establishment for the manufacture of gunpowder has been in successful operation for some years. Fairs are held at Inveraray, on the last Friday in May, and the last Thursday in October; and a great wool market, on the the third Thursday in July.

ISLAND OF ISLAY,

INCLUDING BOWMORE, BRIDGE-END, PORT ASKAIG, PORT-CHARLOTTE, PORT ELLEN, ARDBEG, PORTNAHAVEN, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

ISLAY is a large island, and the most southerly of those called the Hebrides; in length from north to south it is about thirty miles, and its extreme land-breadth about eighteen. Askaig, the most northern port on the island, is distant from Edinburgh (by way of Tarbert), 179 miles, from Inveraray 76, and from Tarbert 40. It lies in a westerly direction from the peninsula of Kintyre, distant from it about twelve miles, and is separated, on the north, from the island of Jura by a narrow channel. It composes three parochial divisions, namely, Bowmore (or Killarrow), Kilchoman and Kildalton. The mountains to the east of the island rise to an altitude of fifteen hundred feet, and are the resort of eagles, falcons, and other birds. The shore is very rugged, but the face of the country is finely varied by hill and dale: many parts are well planted, and the island contains several beautiful lakes, well stocked with most delicious trout, together with the rivers Soru and Laggan—the former empties itself into Loch Indaal, and the latter into Laggan Bay: the Laggan water is not surpassed in the West Highlands as a salmon stream. The land is tolerably cultivated, but it is still susceptible of great improvement. Upwards of three thousand head of black cattle, and several hundred horses, peculiarly adapted for small carriages, are annually exported, besides sheep. An immense quantity of whisky, the produce of the distilleries in the island, is also exported to Glasgow, England, and America. Lead and iron are said to abound in this island, and a company was at one time formed, called the 'Islay Mining Company,' for extracting some of those minerals; the undertaking, however, proved abortive, and the company is dissolved. The proprietary of the island is with Walter Frederick Campbell, Esq. of Islay; Alexander McEwen, Esq. owner of the Sunderland estate; and Colin Campbell, Esq. of that of Balinaby.

There are many ruins remains of ancient castles, churches, &c. scattered over the island; but perhaps the most remarkable natural curiosity in this part of the empire is Sloc-Mhaol-Doridh, a huge basin formed in the rock by the action of the sea, on the south-west point of Laggan Bay, about nine miles from Bowmore, into which the turbulent waters of the western ocean rush, by two channels in the rock, covered with natural arches: the grandeur of the scene presented during the flowing of the sea is inconceivable; this cave is scarcely inferior to the famed one of Fingal, in Staffa, and can only be entered by a boat in fine weather. At the entrance stands a perpendicular rock fifty feet high, with a belt round it, and is designated 'the soldier,' from appearing to guard the approach to it. The interior is dome-roofed and spacious, with a beautiful lake of fresh water 'icy cold and crystal clear.' There are several other interesting natural perforations in different parts of the island, in some of which, as in Sanaig, is found an excellent quality of granite. The scenery in this locality, as well as several other points of the island, is highly interesting, and occasionally approaches the sublime. It was on this coast, in the vicinity of the last-named cave, that, on the 27th of April, 1847, the Exmouth was wrecked, when two hundred and forty-eight of the crew and passengers perished.

BOWMORE, the principal place on the island, is situated on the east side of Loch Indaal, three miles south of Islay House. The town, which consists of two principal streets, and several smaller ones diverging, possesses a good quay and a comfortable inn. It is a place of some business; several trading vessels belong to it, and there is a communication maintained with Glasgow, by means of a steamer, once a fortnight. The public structures are, the parish church—a circular edifice, with a peculiarly formed spire, and a building originally intended for a gaol, but now appropriated to the more beneficial uses of a public library, containing seven hundred volumes. An assembly-room, on the same floor as the library, is generally open as a

POST OFFICE, BRIDGE-END, Duncan McAlister, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, and all parts, arrive (from JURA) every Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday afternoon, and are despatched (to JURA) on Tuesdays at four in the afternoon, on Thursdays (by steamer) at nine at night, and on Fridays and Sundays at four in the afternoon.

POST OFFICE, PORT ASKAIG, Robert Anderson, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from JURA) every Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday afternoon, and are despatched thereto on Tuesdays, Fridays, and Sundays about six in the evening, and on Thursdays (by steamer) about half-past ten at night.

POST, Receiving House, BOWMORE, Alexander Currie, Depute Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from BRIDGE-END) about one hour later than the letters for that place, and are despatched thereto on Sundays, Tuesdays, and Fridays at half-past twelve noon.

POST, Receiving House, PORT CHARLOTTE, Donald Martin, Depute Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from BRIDGE-END) every Sunday and Tuesday about five in the evening, and on Fridays about ten at night, and are despatched thereto on those days at half-past ten in the morning.

POST, Receiving House, PORT ELLEN, James McKerrail, Depute Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from BRIDGE-END) every Sunday, Tuesday, and Friday evening, and are despatched thereto on the same days about four hours earlier than from BRIDGE-END.

news and reading room. There is also a large and excellent parochial school, with a house for the master, built and liberally endowed by Campbell of Islay.

At BRIDGE-END, three miles north of Bowmore, and eight miles south of Port Askaig, is a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, which greatly facilitates the commercial transactions of the island. At the Inn here, a court is held monthly for the recovery of small debts, and sessions for the trial of petty offences. A short distance to the west stands 'Islay House,' the mansion of Campbell of Islay, surrounded with fine gardens and well planted grounds: it is situated at the head of Loch Indaal, of which it commands a fine view, as well as of the adjacent country.

PORT ASKAIG is a small creek or harbour, on the north side of the island, opposite Jura, from which it is separated by the sound of Islay, about a mile broad; the port is 11 miles N. of Bowmore, and has the only quay on the island where vessels of considerable burden can load and unload at low water. It is the nearest port on the island to Glasgow, and there is a regular steamer weekly between that city and Askaig.

PORT CHARLOTTE is a small village, in the parish of Kilchoman, on the west side of Loch Indaal, nearly opposite to Bowmore; it is 16 miles S.W. of Port Askaig, and contains a good inn, a distillery, and an independent chapel.

PORT ELLEN is a sea port and village, in the parish of Kildalton, on the east side of the island; 11 miles S.E. of Bowmore, and 22 S. of Port Askaig. In 1824 there stood only one house here, though in 1836 there were above one hundred and fifty; and the population and habitations have greatly increased since. The bay is considered safe, and is nearly a mile wide; the quay is commodious, and is formed on a rocky promontory near the middle of the harbour; the quay was erected in 1826, and enlarged and improved in 1832, by Campbell of Islay, who also erected a lighthouse. The village is substantially built, and contains two inns. The inhabitants are principally employed in agriculture and fishing; and the prosperity of the village may be said to have been increasing for several years. At ARDBEG, about four miles distant, is the extensive distillery worked by Messrs. Alexander Macdonald & Co., producing, it is said by competent judges in these matters, the best whisky in the island; and large quantities are exported to England and America, by this house and some others in the neighbourhood.

PORTNAHAVEN is a small village and sea-port, 24 miles S.W. of Port Askaig, and 16 S.W. of Bridge-End. It is at the southern extremity of the island, having a quay formed by the rocks on the shore; and near the port is an elegant lighthouse, erected in 1824-5. Here is also a parliamentary church, and a parochial school. A considerable business is done in the season of fishing—the shores on this part of the island abounding with the funny treasures.

The fairs held in the island of Islay are as follow:—at BOWMORE, February 15th, the first Thursday after the 12th August, November 12th for horses, and the Tuesday next before the 12th of November for cattle; at BRIDGE-END, for cattle, on the last Tuesday in each month from April to October, except May, when it is held on the second Wednesday of that month; at BALLACHROY (near Port Askaig), on the Wednesday next before the last Wednesday in May, for horses and black cattle—this fair generally continues three days.

THE ISLE OF JURA,

WITH THOSE OF BELNAHUA AND PLEDDA, COLONSAY, GARVELLOCH, LUNGA, ORANSEY, AND SCARBA, WITH MILLTOWN VILLAGE.

JURA, an island of the Hebrides, is thirty-three miles long, and from two to ten miles broad, separated from Knapdale, on the western coast of Scotland, by the sound of Jura (ten miles broad), and from the island of Islay, to the south, by the sound of Islay (about a mile broad), and, with the other islands, forms the united parish of Jura and Colonsay. Jura belongs to Colin Campbell, Esq. of Jura, whose two sons, extensive graziers, breeding large numbers of black cattle and sheep, reside at Ardfin, which is a respectable mansion on the south shore of the island. The most remarkable object in the isle is the Paps of Jura, an eminence nearly 2,500 feet above the level of the sea; they are three in number, standing on the same ridge, but having two valleys separating them; the tops are round, and consist, for some distance down the sides, of loose stones, rendering the ascent difficult; the top of the highest, called Beinn-an-Oir, is about six miles from the village of Milltown. The island also contains several caves; one of them is so large that, it is said, a regiment of soldiers might perform their exercise in its spacious arena. To the north of the island, in a strait, nearly a mile broad, separating the island of Scarba from Jura, is the gulph of Corry Vreckan, where the rush of waters is so great, during the ebbing of the tide, as to form a terrible whirlpool, the noise of which can be heard for many miles. The red deer abound in the uplands of this island.

BELNAHUA AND PLEDDA, two small islands to the north of Scarba, contain several quarries of excellent blue slate, the property of Mr. John Stevenson; they are at present wrought by Mr. Campbell Paterson; the number of men generally employed is about sixty.

COLONSAY, a rather high rocky island, to the west of Jura, twelve miles long, and about three broad, is the property of John M'Neil, Esq. of Colonsay, who has a good mansion house on the island at Killoran. The ruinous sacred buildings, and the numerous inscriptions on the grave-stones covering the ashes of the illustrious dead, are considered by many almost equal to those found on the island of Iona.

GARVELLOCH, or Holy Island, contains an extensive old fort, called Dunconnel, once a stronghold belonging to the Lords of the Isles; and on one of them, called the Nun's Island, are considerable remains of an old nunnery, said to have been founded by St. Columbus.

ORANSEY, a small island to the south of Colonsay, contains the residence of the late Captain Alexander M'Neil, who was one of the many that perished in the melancholy shipwreck of the Orion steamer, off Portpatrick, in 1850.

MILLTOWN, frequently called Craighouse, the principal village on Jura, is eight miles from Port Askaig ferry. It has a good quay, and the harbour, which is large, and formed by several small islands, has obtained the appellation of Small Isles Harbour. About half a mile north of the village, is the parish church and a parochial school. The Rev. Alexander M'Kenzie is the respected minister of the united parish of Jura and Colonsay. The village contains a distillery, a comfortable inn, and a corn mill.

KILMUN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KILMUN, formerly the capital of a parish of the same name, now incorporated with that of Dunoon, is a pleasant, thriving village, and of late years has acquired no little notice as a place resorted to for sea-bathing: it is situated on the north shore of Holy Loch, 22 miles S.E. of Inveraray, 16 S.E. of Strachur, 7 N. of Dunoon, 30 W. of Glasgow, and 8 W. of Greenock. This place may be almost said to owe its origin to the present proprietor, David Napier, Esq. of Glensheilish, for, previously to attracting his notice, there were very few houses here, whereas it is now a respectable village, having many handsome dwellings, occupied as summer residences by opulent merchants and professionals of Glasgow. There are likewise several pleasant and well-furnished lodging houses. Holy Loch is full three miles long: at its entrance it is scarcely a mile wide, but, within, it expands to a fine sheet of water, extending a mile and a half in width; at its head it receives the lesser and greater Echaig—the latter river flows from Loch Eck, a beautiful fresh water lake, seven miles long and one broad, whose steep rugged shores, rising to a considerable height, form a striking contrast, on a fine day, to its wide placid waters. Both the loch and the two rivers before mentioned afford plenty of sport to the angler, and the ride through this valley to Strachur, or Loch Fyne, is seldom exceeded for wild and sublime scenery. The quay, which was constructed by Mr. Napier (before mentioned), in 1829, will admit the steam-boats alongside at all times of the tide. The quarantine station for the Clyde was formerly opposite this village—where is the modern mansion of James Hunter, Esq. Of the ancient history of Kilmun little is known, but its old church; the mausoleum of the ducal family of Argyll, and especially the tower of the original church, evidence it to have been, in former times, a place of some note. The present church being too small, it is to be replaced, except its venerable tower, by a new building.

LOCHGILPHEAD, ARDRISHAIG, BELLANACH,

KILMARTIN, KILMICHAEL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LOCHGILPHEAD is a thriving post village, pleasantly situated at the northern extremity or head of Loch Gilp, from which the name is derived. It is 125 miles W. of Edinburgh, 56 N. of Campbeltown, 24 S.W. of Inveraray, and 15 N. of Tarbert. The town is of comparatively modern erection, its site containing only two or three fishermen's huts at the commencement of the present century: it now consists of several well-formed streets, the footpaths of which are well flagged—better indeed than the majority of towns in the county; and the inhabitants are piously supplied with water, conveyed by pipes into each of the principal streets, from two fountains on the north side of the town. A court is held here on the first Tuesday monthly, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. Lochgilphead is rapidly improving; in front of the main street a part of the loch has been walled off, and a new piece of ground made, for the convenience of the large cattle fairs or markets. A new level road is also formed to Lochgear (a distance of eight miles), which avoids the hills that obstructed the road from Lochgilphead to Inveraray. The principal employment of the inhabitants is agriculture and fishing, whilst others are occupied in the distilleries, of which there are three respectable establishments in the neighbourhood, namely, the Argyleshire distillery, of considerable repute in its produce, the Glenlip, and the Glenmore. Behind the town runs a small stream, which supplies a dyehouse, and gives motion to two or three mills. On the Kilmory side of the town is a quay, for the accommodation of the small craft engaged in the herring fishery.

A parliamentary church was erected, at the head of Argyle-street, in 1827-8, and in 1834 galleries were added; an Independent chapel is in the same street; a Seccession meeting-house near Colchester-square, and there is now (1851) erecting, to the north of the town, a handsome Scotch Episcopal cathedral church, together with a residence for the Bishop of Argyle and the Isles: the site commands an extensive view of Lochfyne, and the varied and beautiful scenery around. Within half a mile to the west stands 'Oakfield,' the residence of Alexander Campbell, Esq.; and a mile to the south-east is 'Kilmory House,' the seat of Sir John Poulet Orde, Bart.; the house, surrounded with its well wooded grounds, forms a conspicuous and interesting feature in the landscape from all parts of the loch, especially from Ardrishaig, which is directly opposite. Ten miles north-west is 'Duntroon Castle,' the property of Neill Malcolm, Esq. of Poltalloch, who possesses extensive demesnes in this part of the county, and who has, during the last forty years, converted above two thousand acres of soft peat moss on his estate, at the head of Loch Crinan, about two miles from the castle, into excellent corn and grazing land. The farm is appropriately called 'Experiment.' An elegant mansion is being erected in this locality, by the proprietor of the estate. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in March, for horses; on the second Wednesday and Thursday after the 26th of May, for black cattle and hiring servants; on the last Thursday in September, and the second Wednesday and Thursday in November, for black cattle; and on the second Thursday after the last Thursday in November, for horses and hiring servants. A prize show of cattle, horses, sheep, &c. takes place about the latter end of September.

ARDRISHAIG, two miles south, contains about five hundred inhabitants, who are chiefly engaged in fishing and providing accommodations for the numerous steam packet passengers calling here, for whom excellent arrangements are made—almost every house being provided with one or more beds for their reception; and several of the lodging-houses are of a respectable grade. This place may be said to be the port to Lochgilphead. In addition to a protective pier of four hundred yards in length, with a small lighthouse at its extremity, a commodious pier and slip within the harbour, which has a depth of seven feet at low water, was erected, in 1837, by the government commissioners of the Crinan canal, which commences here, and extends to Loch Crinan, a distance of nine miles—obviating a hoisterous voyage of forty leagues round the Mull of Kintyre. Steam packets pass the canal on their way from Glasgow to all parts of the western coast, and by the Caledonian canal to Inverness.

BELLANACH is a small village, about 6 miles w. of Lochgilphead, situated in a glen on the southern bank of the Crinan canal, which here forms a fine triangular sheet of water, and terminates at Crinan, about a mile further west. The village contains a sub-post office, and a parochial school.

KILMARTIN, a small village, nearly nine miles north of Lochgilphead, contains a comfortable inn, a parochial school, and a parish church—the latter completed in 1836. About half a mile north, amidst beautiful scenery, is 'Kilmartin House,' the commodious mansion of Neill Malcolm, Esq. of Poltalloch; and about half a mile up the valley, to the north, is seen the beautiful ruins of Carnazarie Castle, formerly the residence of the bishops of Argyle. Eleven miles west of Kilmartin, by a circuitous road, is 'Craignish Castle,' the residence of Archibald Campbell, Esq. of Jura. At Craignish is also the elegant mansion and demesne of Admiral D. Campbell, now occupied by Lord St. John. Fairs, the first Thursday in March, for horses, and the fourth Thursday in November, for horses and hiring servants.

KILMICHAEL (or Glassary, as it was formerly called) is a parish, situated betwixt the sound of Jura and Lochfyne, 4 miles n.w. of Kilmartin. The farm of Ballimore, in this parish, is worthy of mention, as having been changed into a fine corn land from a wilderness, within the last twenty years, by Mr. James Cringan, the late spirited occupier. Between Kilmichael and Kilmartin there are numerous druidical remains. Two large and much frequented fairs are held here annually, at which from seven to eight thousand head of black cattle are generally exposed for sale—namely, on the last Wednesday in May, which is also for horses and sheep, and the last Tuesday before the last Wednesday in October, at both of which fairs the hiring of servants takes place.

POST OFFICE, LOCHGILPHEAD, Donald Kennedy, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, GREENOCK, ROTHAY, TARBERT, and the SOUTH, arrive every afternoon (Sundays excepted) at half-past two, and on Sundays at eight in the evening, and are despatched at half-past seven in the morning, and to INVERARAY and some places SOUTH on Saturdays at ten at night.

Letters from BOWMORE, CRINAN, JURA and PORT ASKAIG arrive (from INVERARAY) every Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday afternoon at half-past three, and are despatched thereto on the same days.

Letters from KILMARTIN, ACHAVISH, ARDPERN, and ARDRISHAIG arrive and are despatched daily.

OBAN AND ITS VICINITY.

OBAN is a modern neat town and sea-port, in the parish of Kilbride, 136 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 92 from Glasgow, 40 S.S.W. of Fort William, 32 W.N.W. of Inveraray, over Port Sonachan ferry (but 42 by coach road and Dalnally), and 30 S.E. of Tobermory. To Vint, Staffa and Iona hence, going round the island of Mull, the voyage is about 120 miles; and it is about the same distance to Portree, in Skye. The town enjoys a beautiful situation on the west coast of Mid Lorn district, and at the head of a fine bay, formed by the island of Kerrara in front, having an entrance at each end. The bay is from twelve to twenty fathoms deep, is well sheltered by lofty mountains, and large enough to anchor with convenience a large number of merchantmen. There are two commodious quays; that on the north was considerably enlarged and improved in 1836. The imports of Oban consist chiefly of merchandise from Glasgow and Liverpool; and its principal exports are whisky and wool. The municipal government of the town is vested in two bailies and four councillors; and Oban is contributory with the burghs of Ayr, Campbeltown, Inveraray and Irvine, in returning one member to parliament. A quarry of excellent freestone was some years since opened, about four miles south, on the shore of Loch Feochan, on the property of Dugald M'Dougall, Esq., of Galanach. The town is divided by a small river, the west side belonging to Robert Campbell, Esq., of Sonachan; that on the north, to the Marquess of Breadalbane. In the eastern division is a small handsome church, erected in 1821, as a chapel of ease to the parish. In Tweedale-street is an independent chapel, built in 1820, and a secession church, opened in 1835; a handsome free church occupies a commanding site in the rear of the town.

Oban and its vicinity offer many inducements both to the tourist and antiquarian. Among the antiquities may be particularly noticed the ruins of Dunolly castle, situated a mile north of the town; and three miles distant is Dunstaffnage castle—the latter formerly belonged to the powerful Lord of Lorn, and was demolished by Robert Bruce, in retaliation for injuries inflicted upon him and his followers (after crossing Loch Lomond, on his way to Ireland) from that noble: in the chapel of the castle is a remarkable echo. Six miles to the north, on the opposite side of Loch Etive, are the ruins of Beregonium, the ancient metropolis of Caledonia; and two miles further north is Barcalaine castle. From a hill, contiguous to the town, may be seen the distant objects of Duart castle, in Mull; Ardtornish castle, in Morven; the castle of Aross, and the castle of Geoaelin. In visiting these, the antiquarian will find much gratification, all of them having been the residences of the ancient Scotch nobles, and even in their present state, exhibiting proofs of their former strength and grandeur. Oban may also be said to rank among the most healthful and pleasing summer retreats in the Highlands of Scotland. Its situation for bathing is extremely good, and it possesses every accommodation for the convenience of the great number of fashionable and wealthy visitors, who are constantly calling here in summer, on their way to the fine scenery on the western coast, and in Skye, and to the far-famed islands of Staffa and Iona, imparting a liveliness and interest to the appearance of the town. The inhabitants, endeavour to imitate the manners and conversation of the visitors, which causes much better English to be spoken, and far more politeness and urbanity of manners to be displayed here than in many other places on this coast. Steam-boats ply between Glasgow, Greenock, Inverness, Mull, Staffa and Iona, five or six times a week in summer: to Skye and Stornaway twice a week, and to Liverpool once a fortnight during that season. Fairs, for horses, the Monday and Tuesday before the first Thursday in March; for cattle, on the Monday and Thursday before the last Wednesday in May; for sheep and wool, on the third Thursday in July, and the Friday and Saturday before the last Wednesday in October; and for horses, on the Monday and Tuesday before the fourth Thursday in November.

POST OFFICE, Cowder place, Ann Rankin, Post Mistress.—Letters from EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, and all parts SOUTH, arrive (from INVERARAY) every evening at twenty-five minutes past five, and are despatched thereto at half-past twelve noon.

Letters from ARDRISHAIG, ARRAS, TOBERMORY, and MORVEN, arrive on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, and are despatched on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

SOUTHEND,

IS a parish situated at the southern extremity of the peninsula of Kintyre—the village, which is sometimes called Newton Argyll, is 10 miles s. of Campbeltown. Agriculture and fishing are the predominating occupations of the inhabitants, who, in the summer, reap some advantage from the visits of many strangers to this romantic and interesting part of the country. About half a mile south of the village stands the rock Downavertie, a spot interesting to the historian, and the antiquarian, as having been the scene of many sanguinary conflicts, with the details of which the intelligent villagers are conversant—especially the ruthless massacre of three hundred of the M'Donalds here by General Leslie, after their capitulation, in 1647. Few traces of the castle are now remaining, but a mile and a half west stand the walls of a church, said to have been founded by St. Columba, who landed in Scotland in 563. It was called Cill-Cholum-Chille, and the burial ground is divided by a small stream, on the north side of which the Highlanders are interred, and on the south the Lowlanders. A little to the north of the village stands the parish church: and in the village, the Relief church. The parochial school here is a substantial building, and a well-conducted institution.

TARBERT (EAST AND WEST), WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

TARBERT, or, as it is sometimes designated, EAST TARBERT, is a small fishing port and village, situated at the head of a fine sheltered harbour on Lochfyne. It is 139 miles w. of Edinburgh, 37 n. by E. of Campbeltown, 39 s. s. w. of Inveraray and 15 s. of Lochgilhead. The town, or village, may be said to form a semicircle round the harbour—the latter small, and the entrance to it narrow, having several sunken rocks, and consequently difficult of access; but when a vessel has once entered, no water affords more perfect shelter and security. The quays are commodious, and for many years it has been a noted fishing station, particularly for herrings, which are mostly cured for the Glasgow market. In a commanding situation, overlooking the town and harbour, are the remains of an ancient castle and fortification—formerly a place of great strength, and immediately behind the village, in a southern direction, is a small comfortable kirk, and an excellent school; the latter supported by the General Assembly.

WEST TARBERT is one mile distant, and there, also, is a good quay: it is seated at the head of a loch of the same name, which commences here, and in a circuitous route winds through the mountains to Ardpatrik, beyond which it empties itself into the ocean. The scenery on either side of the loch is remarkably picturesque, embracing mountain, wood, and lawn, with an occasional mansion embosomed in foliage. Two roads branch respectively to the east and west sides of the loch. The road to Ardpatrik winds through a fine country in which many of the mountains were, by the late much respected owner, Lieutenant—

General Robert Campbell, planted to their summits. About the sixth mile on this road, is Drumore, the residence of James Campbell, Esq.; the house is hid by its plantations from the road; but from its site there is a pleasing view of the loch and the opposite shore. Four miles further on is the domain of Ardpatrik, the residence of Captain Colin Campbell, R.N., possessing every requisite for a summer residence. At the foot of this domain is a ferry, by which the traveller may pass to the opposite side of West Tarbert loch. From Ardpatrik a road branches to the west; and at a distance of four miles Carse is passed, the mansion of Captain John Campbell; eight miles beyond this is Drimdrissaig, the residence of Dugald M'Neill, Esq., the efforts of whose predecessor—Lachlan M'Neill, Esq., proved so successful in improving the breeds of cattle, sheep, &c. in this part of the country. A mile and a half beyond Drimdrissaig is Ormsary, the seat of William Alexander Campbell, Esq. The eastern road runs through the village of West Tarbert to Clachan. Near the sixth mile-stone is the village of WHITEHOUSE, containing a societies' school, and about half a mile above the village is Stonefield, the fine mansion and extensive domain of John Campbell, Esq., who is proprietor of the town and neighbourhood of Tarbert, and who erected in 1837 a new mansion in an enchanting spot, about two miles north of the village, on the west shore of Lochfyne. An extensive fair is held at Tarbert on the last Wednesday in July, which continues three days, and is for the sale of various kinds of merchandise and horses.

POST OFFICE. TARBERT, John M'Lachlan, Post-Master.—Letters from GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, LOCHGILHEAD and the SOUTH arrive every afternoon at one, and are despatched at half-past nine in the morning.

Letters from CAMPBELTOWN arrive (from CLACHAN) at nine in the morning, and are despatched at half-past one in the afternoon. Letters arrive from and are despatched to ISLAY on Fridays.

TOBERMORY,

WITH THE ISLANDS OF MULL, STAFFA, IONA, ULVA, TYREE AND COLL, AND THE DISTRICTS OF ARDNAMURCHAN AND MORVEN.

TOBERMORY is a thriving sea-port in the island of Mull; 171 miles W. N. W. of Edinburgh, 62 N. W. of Inveraray, and 30 N. W. of Oban. It encircles the extremity of a fine sheltered bay, and is one of the safest harbours among the Western Isles, being protected from the sound of Mull by an island which stretches nearly across the entrance, but leaving ample room at its northern point for the largest vessels to enter the harbour—though none but small craft can effect this at the south-east point, even at high water. The town is between two and three miles from the mainland of Morven, and derives its name from a celebrated well or spring, called Mary's well, to which the vulgar superstitiously ascribed many imaginary virtues. The Spanish admiral's ship Florida, one of the 'Armada,' when at anchor here in 1588, was destroyed by an emissary of Queen Elizabeth's Government: part of the wood of this vessel was presented to his Majesty George IV., on his visit to Edinburgh, by Sir Walter Scott; and there is in the possession of the Duke of Argyll a large brass gun, that belonged to the same vessel, and found a few years since in Tobermory bay. On the west side of the town are the remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to the Virgin, and of a fortification, understood to be of Norwegian origin. Tobermory belongs to the British society for extending the fisheries and improving the sea-coast of the kingdom. The town which was commenced about 1790, is well built, and possesses two good quays: the new quay was begun in 1835, by Colonel Campbell, of Knock, and is about four feet deep at low water, being two feet deeper than the old quay; the former is a little to the north of the latter, and nearer to the entrance of the bay. The town has increased considerably in this direction of late years; and the harbour is much frequented, both by steamers and sailing vessels. The church, which was erected in 1827-8, at the expense of parliament, stands in a fine prominent situation, behind the principal part of the town and overlooking the bay; adjoining the church is a parliamentary academy, completed in 1832, in which the useful and general branches of education are taught, by the talented master, Mr. James M'Millan. In the immediate neighbourhood is a beautiful loch, called Mary's lake, situate between two finely wooded hills, extremely precipitous in their descent: this pleasing spot belongs to Alexander Crawford, Esq., of Drinnin, and lately occupied by Hugh Maclean, Esq., of Coll, who greatly improved it, and erected an elegant mansion on the banks of the lake. The tourist will be much gratified by visiting this picturesque scenery, including the three cascades, one of which is particularly grand. Tobermory is the only village in Mull, or the neighbouring islands, of any consequence connected with trade—this is chiefly domestic, with a tolerably productive herring fishery. A branch of the Western Bank of Scotland is established here, and a good hotel. The sheriff substitute holds a court here once a week, during session, and it is the polling station, at county elections, for all voters residing in the islands of Mull, Coll, Iona, Tyree, Ulva, and in Morven. By ascending a hill in the neighbourhood, a view may be had of the islands of Tyree, Coll, Eigg, Muck, Skye, and various others of smaller importance. The population of Tobermory in 1841, was about 1,400.

MULL, which is about twenty-four miles long, and in some places almost as broad, has been much improved of late. Beinnmore, the highest mountain in the island, is said to approach three thousand feet above the level of the sea. The island contains many remains of ancient castles, &c., among which those of Duart and Aross, on the sound of Mull, are well deserving of a visit from a stranger. On the western side, close to the Ross of Mull, has been worked a quarry of red granite or porphyry, some of which has been lately employed by the Duke of Sutherland, in the internal improvements of Dunrobin castle. Fairs in Mull: at Fishnish, a large horse-fair is held on the first Friday after the 20th of August, and for cattle in May and October; at Ross, Morven, and the islands of Coll and Tyree, fairs are held a few days before those at Fishnish.

The celebrated island of STAFFA is about fifteen miles distant from Mull. To give a description of this magnificent production of nature is, it must be confessed, extremely difficult: all who have seen Fingal's cave concur in opinion that, when it first bursts upon the view, the effect is indescribable—awe and astonishment so completely fill the mind, that there is no room for minor emotions. The island is about a mile long, and a quarter of a mile broad; and is almost entirely composed of hard dark blue stone, called by geologists trap, it is not in large misshapen masses, however, or formed into layers, as rocks are in most other places; but stands in pillars, close to one another—most of them upright, some much bent, while others lie almost horizontally: they are not round, but have various numbers of faces—some exhibiting three, some four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, and even ten, while others have one half circular, and another angular; they are from one to three feet in diameter, and from twelve to ninety feet in height. Staffa is visited five or six times a week by the steam boat from Oban; the visitors are generally lauded at Fingal's cave, stay about an hour on the island to examine its wonders, and proceed to view, for a similar length of time—

The far-famed island of IONA, the earth of which may be termed royal: it is about three miles in length, and one and half in breadth. It was once the luminary of the Caledonian regions, "whence savage clans and roving barbarians derived the benefits of knowledge, and the blessings of religion." It is separated from Mull by a channel of about a mile in width; and is resorted to during summer by the antiquarian, the historian, the tourist, and even the fashionable—who crowd numerously, some to explore or examine, and others to behold and admire, the sacred ruins that on landing arrest the attention of every stranger; these are pointed out by a person deputed by His Grace the Duke of Argyll. Here the visitor finds himself surrounded by the graves of those who were royal and noble, and holy in Caledonia and Hibernia a thousand years ago; while the thick walls, the massive arches, and the finely wrought pillars of the many sacred edifices which, in remote ages, flourished in this sanctified isle, supply the deepest reflections, and awaken the most solemn feelings in the contemplative mind. A parliamentary church was erected here in 1828; and there is a parliamentary school lately established. The inhabitants have lately made a profitable traffic by disposing of the channel pebbles to the visitors, who now frequent the island. They assert, that the pebbles of a certain appearance are endowed with many secret virtues, given to them by their tutelary saint, Columba.

The island of ULVA, separated from Mull by a channel of about one hundred yards broad, is said to produce the best kelp in the Western Highlands. There is a great number of basaltic columns on the shore. It is now the property of Francis William Clark, Esq., who resides on the island.

TYREE, westward of Mull, is a very fertile island; it also abounds in marble, of which, it is said, the rocks on its shore are entirely composed; but, from some unexplained cause, the quarries cannot be profitably worked. A new harbour is formed at Heynish: the quay was commenced in 1836, under the able superintendence of Mr. George Stevenson, civil engineer. A lighthouse, has likewise been raised on the dangerous rocks called Sciravore, which lie about sixteen miles south west of Tyree: it is of granite, obtained from the quarries of Mull, and is considered one of the best and most durable specimens of this kind of architecture in Europe.

COLL, to the north of Tyree, is rather a sterile and mountainous island. On it are the ruins of a castle, which appear to advantage from the sea.

ARDNAMURCHAN, chiefly known from the dangers frequently encountered in the navigation around its projecting point, particularly in boisterous weather, when the tremendous billows of the North Atlantic break against it with awful fury, is a district of considerable length; having Loch Sunart to the south, the Atlantic to the west, the same ocean and Loch Shiel to the north, and Ardgour to the east. It is sterile, but feeds large flocks of sheep, and some cattle; and the hills are stated to be rich in minerals. Upon the point has lately been erected a lighthouse by the Commissioners of the Northern Lights, which is of great service to the navigation of this perilous coast.

MORVEN is an extensive district; bounded on the south-west by the sound of Mull, on the north by Loch Sunart, and on the east and south-east by Loch Linnhe. The country is hilly, and its shores are partially wooded. It is principally occupied in grazing farms, and contains several respectable gentlemen's seats, but no village of sufficient consequence to command attention.

In concluding our brief sketch of these interesting and not wholly unimportant islands, and the parallel districts on the mainland, we may observe that the scenery connected with them is of a description not easily to be forgotten, by those who have once visited them, and is faithfully portrayed by the incomparable Scott in his 'Lord of the Isles.' Airdornish castle, in Morven, so often alluded to by the bard, is well worthy the tourist's notice; as are the interesting remains of Aross castle, the ancient residence of the kings or Lords of the Isles—and Castle Duart, formerly the residence of the M'Leans, in Mull, with Castle Doonan, in the district of Lismore.

AYRSHIRE.

THIS is a populous maritime county, on the western coast of the Lowlands; stretching upwards of seventy miles along the shore of the Firth of Clyde, from Kelly-burn on the north to Galloway-burn, which enters Loch Ryan, on the south; its middle part, which is the broadest, extends about twenty miles across. It is bounded on the north and north-east by the small county of Renfrew, on the east by the counties of Lanark and Dumfries, on the south-east by the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and on the south by Wigtonshire. In figure the county resembles an elongated crescent, with its concavity presented to the sea. At the north and south ends the land is diminished almost to a point, being but a few miles in breadth. The superficial extent of the county comprises about 1,050 square miles of land, and six of lakes. It is divided into three principal or grand districts—Carrick, Cunningham, and Kyle. The first lies on the southern side of the Doon; the second comprehends the whole of the county north of the river Irvine, and Kyle division is situate between the rivers Doon and Irvine.

EARLY HISTORY.—This county was anciently inhabited by the British tribe called the Damni, a branch of the Celtic nation, who survived the period of the Roman yoke, and were, in the course of time, overrun by, and amalgamated with the Scoto-Irish from Kintyre. In 750 these again were partly conquered by a body of Northumbrians, who settled in Kyle. From 843 to 1097, the inhabitants of Ayrshire were governed as a Celtic people, upon Celtic principles. Upon the accession of Edgar, in 1097, the jurisprudence of the county became changed, and an active colonization commenced, which peopled every district with new comers from England. Barons now sprung up, who built castles and churches, and towns arose, which became inhabited by persons engaged in trade. Ayrshire was the scene of perpetual turmoil during the wars of Bruce and Edward. The son of the first Bruce marrying the Countess of Carrick, became Earl of Carrick in her right; and it was their son who, on the expulsion of Baliol, formed pretensions to the throne, which he obtained by his courage, fortitude, and prudence: thus Ayrshire possessed the honour of giving birth to the illustrious restorer of the Scottish monarchy. Some of the valorous exploits of Wallace, in supporting the national independence, were performed in this county. Scarcely any division of Scotland remained so long under the torments of the baronial system as Ayrshire. For centuries the chiefs were perpetually engaged in feuds and rebellions, and so weak or inefficient were the laws, that it was seldom redress or punishment followed outrage. The Boyds, the Dalrymples, the Campbells, the Colvilles, and the houses of Eglinton and Glencairn, had their respective quarrels of long standing, which occasionally ended in reckless violence or sanguinary slaughter. A great proportion of these disturbances arose from contests regarding heritable jurisdictions, such as stewardships and bailiwicks of certain districts. Besides the feuds of these pugnacious barons, the country was frequently distracted by the pride or the crimes of the Kennedys'. So late as the reign of James VI, this powerful clan was involved in a feud of more than ordinary importance, which originated in the cruel treatment of Allan Stewart, the commendator of Crossraguell, in 1570, by the Earl of Cassillis, and his brother, Thomas Kennedy, of Culzean. In the months of August and September of that year, these monsters, with a cruelty almost unexampled, seized the commendator, in order to make him give leases of part of the property of the monastery; and failing to accomplish their ends by fair means, they put him to the torture, by placing his person over a blazing fire. When Kennedy, the laird of Bargenny, heard of this treatment of his friend, he obtained the authority of Government for his liberation, under pain of rebellion. The Earl disobeying this mandate, the laird assembled his retainers, and took the Earl's castle of Dunure, wherein Stewart was confined. The Earl, enraged at this capture, assembled his vassals at Carrick and in West Galloway, and besieged his own castle of Dunure, which was bravely defended by Bargenny, who, by the authority of Government, called out the king's lieges in Kyle and Cunningham to his aid. This caused the Earl to raise the siege, and the gallant Bargenny kept possession of the castle for some time. It however originated a feud between Bargenny and the head of the Kennedys', which remained unextinguished for many years, and produced at last a battle in Carrick, in 1601, between the Earl of Cassillis and Gilbert Kennedy, in which the latter was killed, and which subsequently caused the assassination of the Earl's uncle. A subordinate feud rose between Sir Thomas Kennedy and John Mure of Auchendrain, which led to the murder of the former, and to the execution of the latter and his sons. The feud which had lasted so long between the families of Eglinton and Glencairn, produced many acts of violence, and, in 1586, terminated in the atrocious murder of Hugh, Earl of Eglinton, by the Cunninghams of Robertland, at the private instance of Glencairn, the son of that earl who obtained so much distinction in the history of the Reformation. The laxity of the administration of James VI suffered this infamous matter to be passed over, and the Earl's friends to be released from the sentence awarded against them. The vexations which the people of this county so long suffered by such an ill-organized system, seems to have impressed them with a fervid desire for those political liberties, which they believed were to accrue from the institution of the Covenant. The consequence was, that during the heats of the seventeenth century, few took so active a share in the insurrections which were opposed to royal authority. A committee of the privy council sat at Ayr in 1678, for directing the military execution to its proper objects. In July, 1680, a conflict occurred, wherein several insurgents were taken, and the rebellion on this occasion quelled. Proceedings of this harassing character induced a ready accession to the government of William III, and the conduct of the people who went armed to Edinburgh, to wait upon the Estates, was very magnanimous. It need hardly be mentioned, that the turmoils which had, from a very early period, kept Ayrshire in warlike attitude, and ever ready for tidings of disaster and spoliation, had the natural effect of keeping its agricultural capacities long shut up, and its energies of a useful tendency long untried.

SOIL, SURFACE, &c.—The most fertile part of the shire is the great vale of Cunningham, which is comparatively level; Kyle possesses much valuable land towards the coast, but its interior lies high, and is a rough mountainous territory; Carrick is a hilly wild region throughout, and is only of value or interest in its northern angle, betwixt the rivers Doon and Girvan. In a general sense, the whole district of Ayrshire is shut out, on its eastern boundary, from the adjacent counties, by high ridgy land; and, with little variation, the surface inclines either to the sea, or to the rivers which flow in that direction. The sea coast is mostly sandy, and indented with several excellent harbours. Abundance of seaweed is thrown on the shore, from which great quantities of kelp are annually made; and the coasts are admirably adapted for white fishing. In the rocks are several remarkable caves, worthy the inspection of the curious. The principal eminences are, Knock-Dolton, 930; Knock-Nounan, 1,540; Carleton, 1,554; Knock-Dow, 1,554; Cairn-table, 1,650; and Knock-Dollian, 2,000 feet above the level of the sea. There are many elegant seats belonging to the nobility and gentry of the kingdom; amongst the principal owners are the Earl of Glasgow, the Earl of Eglinton, the Earl of Cassillis, the Duke of Portland, the Marquess of Bute, the noble family of Hastings, and the ancient ones of Kennedy, Blair, Hamilton, Dalrymple, Boswell, Miller, Ferguson, Craufurd, Campbell, Fullarton, Cunningham, &c. To the south of Irvine stand the ancient castle of Dundonald, once a royal residence, and afterwards the family seat of the Cochranes, Earls of Dundonald.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, MINERALS, &c.—It was not until about the middle of the eighteenth century, that the inhabitants of Ayrshire began to discover and avail themselves of its capabilities as an agricultural district. The settlement, at this period, of Margaret, Countess of Loudoun, in Lorn Castle, may be deemed the epoch of efficient improvement; by her great assiduity, precept and example, agriculture was promoted and encouraged; and in a short time the nobility and gentry of Ayrshire began in earnest to improve their estates upon systematic principles, under the skilful direction of the intelligent stewards. Farmers were invited by them from the more southern shires, to instruct the tenantry in the management of land according to the most approved methods of the experienced agriculturist. Observing the peculiarities of the climate, and ascertaining the nature of the soil, the judicious culture of the various species of grasses became a primary object, and the general adoption of dairy farms was the natural consequence; this system has been persevered in, and the dairies in this district are superior, perhaps, to any others in Scotland: the value of their product in milk and butter is very considerable, and 'Dunlop' cheese is unrivalled throughout the country, finding a ready market wheresoever offered, and Ayrshire may now be reckoned as the Cheshire of Scotland. The breed of cattle has likewise been much improved. As agriculture thus successfully progressed, excellent roads were formed, and these have recently been followed up by railways for the transmission of heavy goods and persons. From the fostered spirit of industry, and the enhanced value of land, resulted a corresponding exertion for the establishment of MANUFACTURES: the abundance of fuel—the plenty and cheapness of the necessaries of life, materials for building, and means of transit to the large towns in the adjacent shires—presented facilities for this purpose which were obvious and encouraging. The manufacture of stockings, carpets, cloths, and bonnets extended generally, but Kilmarnock became the most noted. At the capital of the county have been established dyeworks, large iron foundries, and steam-engine manufactories; at Catriue, well-known and extensive cotton works; Cumnock is celebrated for its ingenious and beautiful snuff-boxes, as is Muirkirk for its ponderous iron works. Ayrshire possesses inexhaustible coal-fields, freestone quarries, and ironstone mines, with several rich ores, particularly those of lead and copper; marble, gypsum, and marl have been found, and black lead has been discovered; fireproof stone and whetstone are obtained, and many petrefactions exist in various parts of the county. In the hills of Carrick are agates, porphyries, and other valuable fossils; and traces of antiquity have not escaped the searching eye of the mineralogist.

RIVERS, LAKES, SPRINGS, AND RAILWAYS.—In the ridge of hills which intersect the district of Carrick, almost all the rivers in the south originate. The Tweed, the Esk, the Nith, the Annan, the Urr, and others, flow to the east and south; while the Stinchar, the Girvan, the Doon, the Ayr, and the Lugar, traverse the county, and pour their fruitful streams into the Irish channel. Besides these, the Irvine, and some smaller rivers, water the northern parts of Ayrshire. All these abound with salmon, trout, and other fresh-water fish. In the midst of so many minerals, a number of springs impregnated by their qualities are to be expected; and indeed almost every parish has its mineral water, though none have attained the dignity of spas. There are various inland lakes, particularly in Carrick—the most extensive being Loch Doon, from whence the Doon river flows. Ayrshire participates extensively in the conveniences afforded to commerce and general transit by RAILWAYS, and there are several important lines and branches now in operation, and others progressing. The following are the principal, and their names are indicative of their destinations:—the 'Glasgow, Paisley, Ayr and Kilmarnock Railway,' besides those places, takes in its route Beith and Muirkirk; the 'Scotch Western' includes, by branch, Irvine among other towns; the 'Glasgow, Kilwinning, and Ardrossan' visits those places, and the 'Glasgow and South-Western' goes to Cumnock, &c.

ECCLESIASTICAL AND CIVIL DIVISIONS, &c.—The whole of Ayrshire was formerly comprehended in the bishopric of Glasgow; and it formed three deaneries, corresponding with the three divisions before mentioned. The county now comprises forty-six parishes, forming two presbyteries in the Synod of Ayr and Glasgow. The contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate), belonging to this county, are Ayr and Irvine; one member also represents the shire at large—the gentleman sitting for which, at present (1851), is Lord Patrick James Herbert Crichton Stuart, Whitehall-place, London.

Note.—(a) The town of Salcoats is partly in Ardrossan parish and partly in that of Stevenson, the population of Salcoats town in 1841 was 4238.

(b) The villages of Troon and Shewalton since 1821 have been detached from Irvine and added to Dundonald parish; and this accounts for the decrease in Irvine in 1831.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Ayrshire, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £409,988.; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1845, to £520,827. 13s. 5d.

ARDROSSAN.

A BATHING place and port, in the parish of its name, pleasantly situated on the western shore of Ayrshire, on an accessible point of the coast, and only a mile west of Salcoats, which occupies another promontory: it is 74 miles s.w. of Edinburgh, 30 s.w. of Glasgow, 25 s.w. of Paisley, and 8 n. by w. of Irvine. The town is built upon a plan of regularity and taste; the houses all of stone and of commanding altitude. The visitants in the bathing season will find all the appliances necessary to their enjoyment. The baths include the customary varieties, and are enclosed in a handsome building, both spacious and commodious. The town is chiefly indebted for its existence to the noble family of Eglinton, who had formerly a castle of great strength and extent in the vicinity, but which is now a ruin, and the earl has a mansion in the town. A large and elegant hotel, with a suite of warm and cold baths, was erected by the late Lord Eglinton, at an expense of £10,000. The public rooms, the bed rooms, offices and stabling are most commodious. There are two banking establishments—that of the Bank of Scotland is a commanding building adjoining the hotel.

The harbour was commenced under the auspices of the before-named munificent patron, who ex-

THE BURGH OF NEWTON, THE PARISH OF SAINT QUIVOX, AND MONKTOWN WITH PRESTWICK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

AYR is a royal burgh, and the capital of the county and parish of that name; 77 miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, 33 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 34 s.s.w. of Paisley, 12 s.s.w. of Kilmarnock, and 11 s. of Irvine; situated in the northwest angle of the parish where the river of Ayr flows past it into the frith of Clyde. This border of Scotland has been inhabited from the earliest period of authentic history; for when, in the reign of Severus, the Roman fleet made the complete seaboard survey of Magna Britannica, this part of the coast was crowded with a population that evinced no amicable disposition towards the foreign intruder: subsequently, however, the persevering and insidious encroacher penetrated through southern Caledonia, and the Celtic harp was hushed by the fanning wings of the Roman eagle: accordingly we find that the site of modern Ayr retained, in the 11th century, the undoubted traces of a Roman station; and tradition informs us that a hamlet, the vestige of this station, was in existence until the latter part of the 12th century, when William, surnamed the Lion, erased the odious blot, and laid the foundation of a new town in the ashes of the former conqueror. Here it was that the renowned William Wallace first openly embodied that hardy host which made the Southern 'backward reel,' and that the powerful garrison of Edward I was compelled to cower under his 'thunder arm.' There still lingers a remnant of the venerable church of Saint John, converted by Cromwell into a fort, giving name to the street near which it stands.

At a short distance, on the southern shore, is one of those uncouthly constructed square castles, so frequently arresting the notice of the stranger in this district; it stands on the summit of a rock overhanging the sea, and, from a distance, has an imposing aspect.

In the same direction, on a clear day, may be discerned the celebrated Ailsa Craig, rising 940 feet perpendicular out of the sea. The bay is very much admired, and its graceful curve bears some resemblance to the beautiful bay of Naples. The river is crossed by two bridges—the new one of five arches, with balustrades, entirely of stone, has few rivals for chaste beauty. Immediately opposite, across the firth of Clyde, is the isle of Arran, whose majestic mountains present some features of the sublime, and whose summits are visible to the naked eye, in fine weather, from the headlands of Larne, in the county of Antrim in Ireland. The most conspicuous decoration of the town is the lofty spire, that rises to the height of two hundred and nineteen feet above the New Town-buildings, which were erected in 1828, at a cost of £10,000: these buildings contain a spacious suite of assembly-rooms, and a public reading-room. The noble tower, called 'Wallace Tower,' in High-street, is another ornamental structure; it is embellished with a statue, by Thom, of the hero whose name it bears. A second statue of this warrior occupies a niche in the wall of a house, at the corner of New Market-street. Wellington-square is a fine quadrangle, having a noble erection to form the west side, in the new court-house and hall, built at the joint expense of the county and burgh, at a cost exceeding £30,000. The east front of this edifice, which is wholly of stone, is ornamented with an imposing portico. A verdant lawn forms the centre of the square, enclosed with rails, and the surrounding houses are inhabited by the gentler families of the place: the square, however, would be much improved by the grace and shelter of trees. In the hall are kept the public offices and records for the town, and sessions and courts for the county and burgh are held. The county gaol is a commanding structure, at the back of the County-buildings, its front looking upon the bay: it is arranged upon the modern approved system of discipline.

An extensive trade is carried on in the export of coal from this place to Ireland. Mines of this article, as well as fine quarries of stone, abound in the neighbourhood. The other principal exports consist of iron, coal-tar, casks, lambblack, and water of Ayr stone. Its imports comprise hides, tallow, barley, yarn, linen, spars, deals, and hemp. The convenience for shipping is superior to most of the towns on the coast, as the harbour has been much improved, by carrying an extensive stone pier into the sea, affording a greater depth of water for vessels entering, and security when in the harbour. The terminus of the Glasgow, Kilmarnock, and Ayr Railway is a handsome ornament to the Newton side of the river.

The civil government of Ayr was vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors; but by the new bill for the regulation of municipal corporations, the burghs of Ayr, with Wallace Town and Newton, are united under a common magistracy and jurisdiction. Ayr is connected with the burgh of Irvine, in this county, and Campbeltown, Inveraray, and Oban, in Argyshire, in returning a member to parliament: the present representative is Lord James Crichton Stuart. The county constituency numbers 4,308; that of the burghs, 1,049. The lord-lieutenant of the county is the Earl of Eglinton; and Archibald Bell, Esq. is sheriff. The present county member is Alexander O'wald, Esq.

An academy, founded by subscription in 1798, stands foremost among the public establishments. It is conducted by a rector and five masters, with able assistants; the superintendence of the whole is vested in certain directors appointed by the Crown, by which the seminary was created a body corporate. The Latin, Greek, English, French and Italian languages, writing, arithmetic, drawing, geography, navigation, mathematics, natural philosophy, and chemistry, are taught in this institution. Ayr library, which contains several thousand volumes, affords recreation to its numerous subscribers. A mechanics' institution, formed in 1825, is now in a flourishing state; it has a library attached, containing more than two thousand volumes. There are other libraries of lesser note, and public reading-rooms in the town's buildings. Two talented newspapers are published in Ayr weekly—the Observer, on Tuesday, and the Advertiser, on Thursday. Races are held here annually in the autumn; two excellent packs of fox hounds, and one of harriers, hunt in the county; and in the town are spirited curling and bowling clubs. A small but neat theatre occasionally opens to gratify the admirers of dramatic representations.

There are two churches of the establishment in the town, one in the parish of Newton, and another at Prestwick. The other places of worship in Ayr and its vicinity are for the Free Church, the United Presbyterians, the Episcopalians, Independents, Reformed Presbyterians, Methodists, Moravians, and Roman Catholics. The new Free church, in Sandgate-street, is a singularly elegant edifice. The charitable institutions are numerous and liberally conducted: the poor are assisted from funds arising from lands and donations; and a dispensary gives medicine and surgical aid to the sick. Besides these, there are a sailors' society, instituted in 1581; a merchants' society, established in 1655; a fund, formed in 1821, for decayed members, their widows, and orphans; the Ayr Sabbath school union society; and the Ayr universal society.

The celebrated Scottish bard, Robert Burns, was born about two miles and a quarter south-east of Ayr, in a small cottage, now converted into a public house, about a quarter of a mile from which a very elegant monument has been erected to his memory; it is placed on the banks of the river Doon, amidst objects and scenery which had often inspired his muse. The locality of Tam O'Shanter lies in the immediate neighbourhood of the cottage. The Chevalier Ramsay, author of Cyrus's Travels, &c. was a native of the town.

There are two weekly markets—Tuesday for grain and cattle, and Friday for the sale of dairy produce, poultry, and general business. Fairs are held on the Thursday and Friday before the second Wednesday in January; on the first Tuesday in April, for black cattle, &c.; the last Friday in April, the Thursday and Friday before the second Monday in July, and on the second Thursday and Friday in October.

NEWTON parish is divided from that of Ayr by the river, over which there is a handsome bridge of modern erection. Weaving is carried on here, for the Glasgow manufacturers, to a considerable extent; here are also four iron-foundries, a salt works, and the extensive ship-building yards of Messrs. Sloan & Gemmell. The coals from the Ayr colliery are shipped on this side the harbour; the colliery is in the parish of Saint Quivox, and, from the employment it furnishes to the industrious class, is of material importance to the neighbourhood.

SAINT QUIVOX, a populous parish, in the district of Kyle, lies on the banks of the Ayr river, and is bounded on the east by Torbolton, and on the west by Newton of Ayr and Monkton. The parish is nearly all arable, is finely enclosed, and beautified by plantations.

WALLACE TOWN, and a district called CONTENT, consists of a number of streets adjoining to Newton, and are both in the parish of Saint Quivox. A new church of the establishment was erected in Content in 1834, and opened 8th March, 1836; it is a very handsome edifice, of the Gothic order; the site is well chosen, being in a populous neighbourhood, on the north-east bank of the river Ayr; it was built by subscription, at an expense of nearly £1,500, and has sittings for upwards of 800 persons. Nearly adjoining the new church is a new Roman Catholic chapel, erected in 1826-7, at a cost of about £2,000; it is a chaste structure, in the Gothic style, fronted with freestone. In Wallace Town are also chapels belonging to the United Presbyterians, Reformed Presbytery, and the Independents.

MONKTON, a parish in the district of Kyle, lies on the sea coast, betwixt Symington and Dundonald on the north, and Newton and Saint Quivox on the south. The parish formerly extended southward to the river Ayr, and comprehended the present parish of Newton, which was erected into a separate parochial district in the last century; it now includes the ancient and abrogated parish of Prestwick. The village of Monkton is situated on the high road to Glasgow, and distant four miles from Ayr.

The small town (or rather village) of PRESTWICK, or Prestewick, is one mile and a half from Ayr. It was at one period a place of some consequence, having been created a burgh of barony at an early date; and its charter, which was renewed by James VI. in 1600, granted to it a weekly market and an annual fair; the former has fallen into disuse, from the proximity of its more thriving neighbour, Ayr. The market cross, which is of considerable antiquity, still exists; and it has its gaol and council-house; in the latter the bailies and freemen meet quarterly, to regulate the affairs of the burgh; and the Prince of Wales is recognised as the superior of the town. There has lately been erected here a handsome new church, for the accommodation of the inhabitants, and those of Monkton.

BALLANTRAE AND COLMONEL,

BALLANTRAE is a small sea-port in the parish of that name, 105 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 68 s.w. from Glasgow, 34 s. of Ayr, 24 n.e. of Portpatrick, 18 n. of Stranraer, 13 s. by w. of Girvan, and 25 s.s.w. of Maybole: situated near the south-western extremity of the county, and on the banks of the river Stinchar, which here falls into the Frith of the Clyde. The approach to the town from Stranraer is over the river, across which is an excellent stone bridge of three well-proportioned arches. On the right, near the bridge, stand the ruins of Ard-Stinchar castle, that formerly belonged to the Hamilton family, and was inhabited by them about one hundred and seventy years ago; the ancient clock, belonging to the tower now standing, is still used as the time-keeper for the town. The place is principally supported by its fishery of salmon and cod-fish, and by the manufacture of coarse linen and plaids—in the weaving of which about fifty looms are employed; the salmon fishery belongs to the Earl of Stair. Old Kirkcudbright kirk, now in ruins, gives a mournful yet pleasing effect to the surrounding scenery. The present kirk is a neat modern building, ornamented with stone, in the plain Gothic style. There are several schools in the parish, including Sunday, parochial, and private schools. In addition to his salary, the master of the parochial school enjoys the interest of £400, bequeathed for the education of the poor children of the parish. There are no resident magistrates; and the nearest court is held at Girvan, where small debts are recoverable only by summons. Ballantrae is without either fairs or weekly market, but there is an annual cattle show in the month of June.

COLMONEL is a parish, bounded on the north and west by the mouth of the Clyde—the village, a small one is situated 5 miles s. by n. of Ballantrae, on the north bank of the Stinchar—a stream famed for its salmon and trout. In the village is a parochial school and an anti-burghers' meeting-house; there is also within the parish a Cameronian place of worship. The extent of this district is twenty miles in length by nine broad; it is composed of good pasture, and is undergoing great improvements. There are in all twenty-three inheritors, but the chief part is the property of the Duke and Duchess de Coigny, Sir William Fettes, the Marquess of Ailsa, Dr. Hamilton, and Mr. Thomas Kennedy, of Dunure. The picturesque ruins of Craignell, Kirkhill, Rockdolean, Pinwherry, Knockdaw, and Carleton Castles, are to be seen in this parish, which also abounds in lime. The nearest approximation for persons desirous of visiting the far-famed Ailsa Craig is from Lendlefoot, in this neighbourhood. Fairs are held here on the first Mondays in the months of February, May, August and November (old style); there are also four quarterly cattle-markets at the village of Barrhill, seven miles distant, in this parish.

BEITH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BEITH is a market and post town, in the parish of that name, district of Cunningham; 62 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh, 19½ S. W. of Glasgow, 11 S. S. W. of Paisley, 5 N. by E. of Dalry, and 12 N. by E. of Saltcoats. It is situated near the confines of Renfrewshire, on an eminence commanding a fine and extensive view of the beautifully diversified country around, of which the Loch of Kilbirnie, at the distance of about a mile, forms a charming feature. The town, which contains many excellent houses, is gas-lighted, but irregularly built, is of modern date, comprising at the commencement of the last century only a few humble habitations. Its neighbourhood is now the residence of many respectable families; and until within these few years was a place of some considerable trade, and noted for its manufacture of linen thread, of which large quantities were made here both for home and export trade. The manufacture of silk goods too, was formerly extensive, but this has been almost entirely superseded by that of cotton, in which the majority of the inhabitants are now employed by the manufacturers of Paisley and Glasgow. The principal branches are silk printing and dyeing, in addition to those already mentioned; (for which there is a respectable establishment at Roe Bank) lime burning, and the making of ropes, twine, bricks and tiles. Three banking houses are established in the town—they are branches respectively from the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Western Bank of Scotland,' and the 'Union Bank of Scotland.'

The whole of the parish of Beith is enclosed and subdivided, and is almost all arable: the farms are small, and the tenants of this and the neighbouring parish of Dunlop may be said universally to make cheese, known by the name of 'Dunlop cheese,' which is held in as high estimation in Scotland as the cheese of Cheshire or Gloucestershire is in England. The value of this commodity sent annually to market from this parish has been calculated at upwards of £4,000. The neighbourhood of Beith produces coal, and abundance of limestone. In 1807 a very handsome church of the establishment, with a tower, was erected on the most elevated part of the town; its site is 343 feet above the level of the sea. The other places of worship are a Free church, and two for United Presbyterian congregations. The town-house was built by subscription in 1817; the late W. Wilson, of Crummock, was a liberal contributor. The upper part of the building contains a court-room and other offices; the lower part consists of shops, the rents of which are applied to purposes of public benefit. The ladies' benevolent society is worthy of particular commendation, and there is an excellent parochial school: connected with the latter is a school of industry for females. There are also a Free Church school, and some respectable private schools—one of the latter for boarding young ladies. At Giffen, a short distance from the town, are the ruins of the once stately castle of the Montgomeries; there is also another ruin at Hasselhead; and at the top of Cuff-hill, a considerable eminence, is a druidical remain, known by the name of 'Rocking-stone'—Two large stone coffins supposed to be likewise of druidical origin, were discovered here thirty-five years ago. The market is held on Friday; and the fairs on the first Fridays in January and February (old style), and on the 30th of August.

CATRINE IN SORN AND MAUCHLINE.

CATRINE is a thriving manufacturing village in the parish of Sorn, 72 miles W.S.W. of Edinburgh, 32 s. of Glasgow, 14 N.E. of Ayr, 12 S.S.W. of Kilmarnock, 5 N. from Old Cumnock, and 4 N. from Ochiltree; pleasantly situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north bank of the river Ayr. This place has risen from insignificance to a considerable town. In 1787 its site contained only a blacksmith's shop and a meal mill, while its present population numbers nearly 3,000. The cause of this surprisingly rapid increase is the erection of cotton works by the late Claud Alexander, Esq. of Ballochmyle, who, having acquired a large fortune in the East Indies, purchased the land for the purpose of establishing works thereon, by which he might increase the value of his property here. But not understanding the cotton business himself, he formed a partnership with the late David Dale, merchant of Glasgow, with whom he carried on the business until the 13th of April, 1801, when it was transferred to new proprietors. These extensive works employ a large number of hands; and excellent schools, with a library of five hundred volumes are among the privileges enjoyed by the work-people, who are in great part owners of the houses in which they live. The other principal trading establishments are two for the manufacture of a peculiar and beautiful description of snuff-boxes. Sorn Castle, about a mile and a half from Catrine, once the seat of the Loudon family, is now the property and residence of Mrs.

Somerville, who, with Miss Farquhar, Sir James Boswell and Claud Alexander, Esq. are the principal heritors of the parish of Sorn—which abounds with coal, limestone, and ironstone. Dugald Stewart, Esq. the late celebrated professor of moral philosophy in Edinburgh, was born in the neighbourhood of Catrine.

The parish of Sorn, is bounded on the east by Muirkirk, on the south by Auchinleck, on the west by Mauchline, and on the north by Galston and Strathaven: its form is nearly square, measuring about six and a half miles each way. Formerly this parish formed a part of the extensive one of Mauchline; the parish church stands about three miles distant from that village. The land, originally moorish, has been much improved and well inclosed; and there are fine plantations near the Ayr, which river runs through the parish, from east to west.

MAUCHLINE, a considerable town and capital of its parish, is two miles and a half from Catrine; situated in a pleasant part of the county, and surrounded on all sides by a delightful country, interspersed with several elegant mansions. The weaving of cotton goods in this as in all the towns of the neighbourhood, forms the principal occupation of the inhabitants. Besides this branch, there is another arrived to great importance, and in which three firms are established here—this is the manufacture of a beautiful description of snuff boxes, cigar cases, &c. Messrs. W. and A. Smith have long enjoyed the patronage of Royalty. The buildings of the town are neat and possess an air of pleasing variety. Mauchline Castle, the present residence of Mrs. Mary Hamilton, is an ancient building well deserving the notice of the antiquarian. There are several excellent benevolent societies for the relief of sick members and poor widows, and a bible society has been, for a length of time, promoted with success. The parish school is well conducted and numerously attended, as also is the new educational institution, founded by James Stewart, Esq., of Haughhead. In this establishment fifty poor children are taught free, and the remainder are charged a moderate sum for their instruction.

Burns resided several years at Mossiel, a small farm, about half a mile to the north of Mauchline, on the left side of the road from thence to Kilmarnock.

The steading may still be seen environed by a few trees, as well as the fields, in traversing which, it is said, he composed some of his best poems. His chief resort when he visited Mauchline, was the public-house, kept by John Dow, which still stands—a thatched house of two flats, nearly opposite the churchyard gate. The cottage of 'Poosie Nancy,' or Mrs. Gibson, the scene of the 'Jolly Beggars,' stands more immediately opposite the churchyard gate. Mauchline kirk, the scene of the 'Holy Fair,' was of the pure barn species. There is now an elegant new church, in the Gothic style, with a steeple. In the surrounding cemetery may be seen the graves of the Rev. Mr. Auld, Nause Tinnock, and several other persons, who figure in the satires of Burns; and on the banks of the Ayr, at a short distance from Mauchline, is the scene of some of the bard's more pleasing poems—his lyrics particularly.

CUMNOCK, AUCHINLECK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMNOCK (or OLD CUMNOCK) is a considerable village of thoroughfare; 60 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 16 E. of Ayr, and the same distance s.s.e. of Kilmarnock; situated on a line of road between Dumfries on the south-east and Glasgow on the north, 44 miles from the former town, and 38 from the latter. The principal part of the town occupies the site of what was formerly the churchyard; the present cemetery was, at one period, the place of execution, and contains the remains of three persons who were shot on the spot, in 1685, by a party of Highlanders, for their adherence to the covenanted work of reformation; and the corpse of Peden, a martyr of the covenanting body, who died in the parish of Sorn, was exhumed, by a party of dragoons, after being interred six weeks, and ignominiously buried at the gallows foot. The village, which is of an irregular triangular form, is seated in a deep sheltered hollow, at the confluence of the Glisnock and Logan waters; it was celebrated for the manufacture of those beautiful wooden snuff boxes—a species of trade which originated here above forty years since, and, with some few exceptions, as Lawrence Kirk, Catrine and Mauchline, was confined to Cumnock, where there are now only two establishments remaining, Plane tree is the wood used in the manufacture, and great ingenuity is evinced in adorning the lids with devices: the very nice manner in which the hinges are constructed is admirable, and although, in this part of the box, many imitations have been attempted, all have failed to rival the original manufacture. Two banks are in operation here—namely, a branch of the Ayrshire Banking Company, and one of the Bank of Scotland: there is also a bank for savings, and a public library—the latter established in 1792, by a company of shareholders.

The places of worship are, a church of the Establishment, a Free Church, one of the United Presbyterian, and a chapel for Independents. To the parochial school, which is well attended, the sum of £25. annually, was left by Charles Duncan, Esq. late merchant of London, and a native of Cumnock: the late Marquess of Bute paid the teacher a salary for educating twenty poor children of this parish, and he also pays the schoolmasters of New Cumnock and Ochiltree for the instruction of ten children in their respective parishes. The castle of Terrenzean, now in ruins, is in the neighbourhood—it gives the title of baron to the family of Dumfries. About two miles east from Cumnock are the ‘Lugar Iron Works,’ under the superintendence of an able manager, Mr. Archibald Wood; and lately have been built, for the workmen and their families, numerous comfortable and neat cottages, forming a considerable village: no trade, however, is carried on here but that connected with the company's store, although the population exceeds fifteen hundred. The market at Cumnock is held on Thursday; and the fairs on the fourth Thursday after Candlemas, on the Wednesday succeeding the last Tuesday in May, and on the Wednesdays after the first Tuesday in July and after the third Tuesday in October, all old style.

AUCHINLECK (pronounced Affleck) signifying a field or rock, is a parish eighteen miles in length, by only about two in breadth, watered on its northern extremity by the Ayr, and by the Lugar on the south. Coal and limestone are produced here, but the soil is, for the most part, rather unproductive. The village, a respectable little place, is situated somewhat above a mile from Old Cumnock, and about three from Sorn and Catrine. Like Cumnock, many are employed in weaving and sewing muslins for the Glasgow houses, and there are two establishments for the manufacture of snuff boxes. The places of worship are an Established Church, and one belonging to a congregation of Seceders. The ruins of Auchinleck castle stand in an angle, formed by the Duple burn and the Lugar; and in the neighbourhood is the Place of Auchinleck, a handsome mansion, erected in the last century by Lord Auchinleck, senator of the college of justice, and father of the eminent and amiable James Boswell, Esq., the friend and biographer of Johnson: the house is still the property of the Boswell family. A well attended fair for the sale of lambs, is held annually on the last Tuesday in August.

The situation of this village is not exceeded by any in the county for beauty; it is seated in a fine fertile valley, near to the pellucid water of the Girvan, which is fed by a number of small streams, some of them descending through deep and woody glens, admired for their picturesque and romantic loveliness; while the elegant mansions of the affluent that are interspersed throughout the district, and the hoary ruins of two ancient castles, contribute to the

DALMELLINGTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DALMELLINGTON is a parish, about ten miles in length, by three in breadth—the town or village, a burgh of barony, is 72 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 49 s. of Glasgow, 42 n.w. of Dumfries, 24 s.e. of Kilmarnock, 15 s.e. of Ayr, 14 e. of Maybole, 12 s. of Old Cumnock, and 6 e. of Stratton. This thriving little place is pleasantly situate on the north bank of the water of Doon, and near to the base of an eminence, from the summit of which a fine view is obtained of a varied character, comprising rude and lofty mountains and the softer features of cultivation. The manufacture of blankets and plaiding, and the weaving of cotton goods, furnish employment to many hands. Besides the trade enjoyed by the town, it derives some advantage from the resort of parties of pleasure and for fishing; those who intend to partake of the latter amusement will find on the banks of Loch Doon neat boats, furnished by the proprietors of the two good inns at this place, the 'Cross Keys' and the 'Black Bull.' The loch is a beautiful sheet of water, with a hard rocky shore, extending eight miles in length, and one in breadth, abounding in trout of fine flavour. On an island in the lake are the remains of Balloch castle. Some years since a fishing-party discovered, at the bottom of the loch, what appeared to be boats; and having obtained the necessary assistance, they succeeded in raising three canoes—the largest measuring twenty-four feet in length by four in breadth, hewn out of a solid log of oak; two were much decayed, but the third was so little impaired as to allow of its being floated on the surface, with a person in it, for a considerable time. In Dalmellington are a public and private library, and a reading-room well furnished with standard works, periodicals, and newspapers; a sum has been left in trust for the support of the latter and the private library, and for the education of a certain number of children. Fairs are held in March, May, and December.

Situated about three miles south-east from Dalmellington on the road to Ayr, are the Dalmellington extensive iron works and collieries—from these works have originated the two villages of CRAIG MARK and WATERSIDE, containing a population of two thousand or upwards, chiefly employed by the company. So prolific are the coal works here, that the article is sold at the low price of three shillings and sixpence the ton. The company have a store for supplying their workmen with the necessities they may require, but there is no other trade in the villages. John Holdsworth, Esq. is the resident managing partner, assisted by Mr. John Hunter.

DALRY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DALRY is a parish in the district of Cunningham—the town is 69 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 25 s. w. of Glasgow, 16 s. s. w. of Paisley, 5. s. w. of Beith, 4 n. of Kilwinning, and 7 n. of Saltcoats; pleasantly situated on a rising ground, surrounded by the rivers Caaf, Rye, and Garroch, which run in different directions so near the village, as to give it, when the streams are swelled with rain, the appearance of an island. At the beginning of the last century, Dalry village contained only about six dwellings, and a population not exceeding a hundred; at present (1851), there are about 6,000 inhabitants. The town consists of six streets, three of which diverge from a centre forming a small square; many of the houses are well built, and the shops are neat, and the streets are gas-lighted by a company formed in 1834. The branches of manufacture existing in the town and parish are those of cotton and carpet yarn, and silk and harness weaving, in which many of both sexes are employed; while a considerable number of females are occupied in sewing and embroidering, usually denominated ‘Ayrshire needlework,’ for the Glasgow and Paisley manufacturers. The dressing and spinning of flax is likewise carried on to some extent, and lime and coal abound in the neighbourhood. There are several public houses for the accommodation of travellers, and two which belong to the grade of Inns—namely the ‘Blair Arms,’ and the ‘White Hart.’ Near to Dalry are extensive iron works, at present not in operation, producing thereby a great check to the trade of the town, and causing a newly-erected village to be depopulated.

To the west is a beautiful natural cascade, which has a curious and singular appearance during the continuance of frost. At Auchinleck, two miles from Dalry, is Blair House, an ancient pile of architecture, at present the residence of Captain W. F. Blair, who courteously permits strangers to inspect the beautifully laid-out grounds, and his fine museum of foreign and British curiosities. Here is also a cave, evidently the work of nature, and well-deserving the examination of visitors to this district: it is about 103 feet in length, and from five to twelve in height; the roof is encrusted with petrefactions, and over the entrance projects a vast rock, 30 feet by 27. Its interior resembles Gothic arched work; near the middle it expands into a spacious chamber, 35 feet long by 12 broad, and 12 feet in height. In former times popular superstition peopled it with elves—it accordingly received the appellation of ‘elf-house,’ in later days, under the arbitrary reign of Charles the II., it afforded a refuge to the covenanters of this parish from the violence of their infuriated persecutors. In Dalry parish also is ‘Camp-hill,’ where the Scottish army is said to have encamped previous to the battle of Largs, in 1263. Dalry bestows the title of Baron upon the eldest son of the Earl of Glasgow. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and there are fairs in January, May and July.

POST OFFICE. Jane Stirratt, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from GLASGOW) every morning at half past six and evening at six, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past eleven in the forenoon and half past seven in the evening.

Letters from Ayr and other places SOUTH arrive daily at twelve noon, and are despatched at ten minutes past five in the evening.

GALSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GALSTON is a parish, in the district of Kyle-Stewart—the village, a considerable one, or perhaps more properly the town, is eligibly situated on the left bank of the Irvine, on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr, and from Dumfries to Glasgow; it is 22 miles s. from the latter city, 16 n. n. e. of Ayr, and five from Kilmarnock; seated in a hollow, sheltered on all sides by rising grounds. The chief employment of the industrious class is weaving: there are two flour mills, and one each for preparing flax, for the manufacture of snuff, and for paper mill-board—the latter erected early in the fifteenth century, and the only one in the county. The snuff mill, of recent date, is also the only one of its kind in the shire. Another occupation is also presented to the labouring class—that of raising coal, of which a large quantity is obtained from the estates of the Duke of Portland—who is superior of the parish. There are several benefit societies belonging to the town, and some excellent schools. Blair's charity school occupies a handsome building, opened in 1841, under the will of the late Charles Blair, Esq., of Galston, who bequeathed certain heritable property, which was to accumulate until the income amounted to £200. per annum, for which two hundred and two children of either sex are educated and clothed. There are likewise two sabbath evening schools, wherein two hundred children receive instruction; also a subscription library, a missionary association, and a bible society.

The parish extends about thirteen miles in length, by from four to five in breadth; lying in the upper part of the county, contiguous to Lanarkshire; and separated by the Irvine from the parish of London on the north, Sorn bounding it on the south. The surface is diversified with hills, but the land is generally arable, and there is a considerable quantity of wood. The district is watered by some small tributaries of the Irvine, and the river Avon, which rises in the upper part of the parish. About a mile from the town is Loudon castle, a large and magnificent structure, in the modern castellated style: this, together with the old castle of Cessnock and Bar, surrounded as they are by natural and artificial woods, highly enhance the beauty of this district—in which is also Paties' Mill, celebrated in the delightful song called 'The Lass of Paties' Mill.' The annual fairs are on the third Thursday in April, the first Thursday in June, and about the first of December.

GIRVAN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GIRVAN is a parish, in the district of Carrick—the town, a burgh of barony, is 99 miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, 56 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 31 n.n.w. of Portpatrick, the like distance n.n.e. of Stranraer, 21 s. by w. of Ayr, 13n. by s. of Ballantrae, 12 s.s.w. of Maybole, and 6 s.w. of Daily; situated on the left bank of the Garvan or Girvan, near to its influx with the sea, and at a point exactly opposite the islet called Ailsa Craig. This rock, which is fifteen miles distant, rises out of the Frith of Clyde, to the height of a thousand feet. It is two miles in circumference; and the top, which is conical, is covered with a luxuriant crop of heath, grass, and other plants, which feed great numbers of goats and rabbits. In one place the nettles form an impenetrable forest, six feet in height, and all the other plants likewise attain a proportionable gigantic size. All around, on the precipitous sides of the rock, uniformly nestle almost inconceivable numbers of solan geese, puffins, and gannets, which flutter about, and produce an incessant deafening noise. On a long terrace or shoulder of the craig, at the elevation of 200 feet from the base, stands a deserted square tower, or castellated house, still very perfect as a ruin. Higher up issue two sparkling and beautiful springs of water, one of which forms a small marsay plain, covered with various plants, amongst others the hydrocotyle vulgaris, of extraordinary magnitude. The rock belongs to the Marquess of Ailsa, who draws from it a yearly rental of about £30, which is paid by the feathers of the fowls and the rabbit skins. Naturalists and botanists would find a visit of value, in increasing their knowledge of the vegetable world.

The harbour of Girvan, now convenient for shipping, underwent great improvement at the expense of the late Sir H. D. Hamilton, the then sole proprietor. Steam packets between Glasgow, Ayr, and Stranraer, call off Girvan, and land or embark passengers and goods, by means of light boats. Large quantities of grain, of various kinds, are annually exported hence, chiefly to Liverpool and Glasgow. The consignments of timber from North America to merchants in this town are considerable; the trade in coal and lime is likewise important—the mines of the former and the quarries of the latter being numerous in the neighbourhood, but the principal business of the town consists in the manufacture of a variety of cotton and other goods, for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, which affords employment to the bulk of the inhabitants. The government of the town is vested in two bailies and twelve common councilmen—four of the latter being chosen annually, upon the retirement or otherwise of the like number, on the 12th of October, the Dutchess de Coigny, or her representative, is superior of the borough.

The places of worship are, a church of the establishment; a Free Church of Scotland, and others for reformed, and united presbyterians, and reformed protestants. To the parochial school a valuable donation was made by the late Mrs. Crawford, of Ardmillar, who left the interest of £1,000. for ever to the teachers, for the education of forty children, subject only to the deduction of two guineas, to be distributed in small prizes amongst the pupils. The same munificent lady left also the interest of £1,000. of which £12. are given to the precentor of the church for the instruction of ten of the children in sacred music, and the balance to be divided among poor householders, not receiving parish relief. Here is also a charity school supported by various donations and subscriptions from the gentry and others residing in the town and neighbourhood. A market, chiefly for grain, is held on Monday; and the fairs are on the last Mondays in the months of April and October, for stock, hiring servants, and general business.

POST OFFICE, James Muir, Post Master.—Letters from all parts (except the places hereafter mentioned), arrive every morning at twenty minutes before eleven, and are despatched at ten minutes before seven in the evening.

Letters from STRANRAER, NEWTON-STEWART, and BALLANTRAE, arrive every evening at half-past six, and are despatched at a quarter past eleven forenoon.

IRVINE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

IRVINE is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, a sea-port, and the capital of its parish, in the district of Cunningham; 67 miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, 25 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 11 n. of Ayr, the same distance s. of Beith, and between 6 and 7 w. of Kilmarnock; agreeably placed on rising ground, on the north bank of the river Irvine, about a mile from its junction with the sea, and upon the line of the Glasgow and Ayr Railway. The situation of the town is dry and airy, a broad street running from south-east to north-west the whole length of it. On the southern side of the river, but connected with the town by a fine stone bridge of four arches, is an extensive suburb, but in the parish of Dundonald: this section of the town abuts upon the frith of Clyde, and includes the harbour and quay, and contains a ship-building yard, two foundries, and lime works. In the centre of the town is the council chamber, surmounted by a steeple, and adjoining is the court-house and gaol. Irvine is a town of considerable antiquity, as appears from the records of the burgh, Alexander II. having granted a charter to the burgesses, confirming some previous royal grants. From another similar document, it is apparent that the burgesses were in possession of the entire barony of Cunningham and Largs. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer and twelve councillors; and unites with Ayr, and with Campbeltown, Inveraray and Ohan, in Argyleshire, in returning one member to parliament: the present representative is Lord Patrick James Crighton Stuart, and the number of constituents at the last election was 244. A bailie court is held every Monday, and one for the recovery of small debts on every alternate Monday. There is an extensive export of coal at this port, and large imports of iron, timber, slates, limestone, and grain; and important plans for the improvement of the harbour are in contemplation. There are several commodious inns—the King's Arms, both as a commercial and posting house, merits the support it receives.

The church, which is a handsome stone building, and of large dimensions, with a spire and a clock, stands on a rising ground betwixt the town and the river, and is an ornament to the place. There are six other places of worship, including a 'quoad sacra' and two Free churches, which are all ornamental edifices. At the north end of the town an academy was erected, in 1814, at an expense of £2,250 of which sum the burgh gave £1,633. and the remainder was supplied by public subscription: in this institution, which is an embellishment and honour to Irvine, are three teachers, by whom are taught, on very moderate terms, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, the modern languages, mathematics, writing, arithmetic, &c. There is a free school, also maintained by public spirit and pecuniary aid, which instructs about one hundred and twenty pupils: the master receives a yearly salary of £50. There are likewise two public schools at Fullarton—one maintained by the Free church, and a female school by the Countess of Eglinton. The news-room here is furnished with London, Edinburgh, and many of the Scotch provincial papers; an extensive subscription library, also, affords a fund of literary amusement and information to its numerous members; and there is an excellent circulating library in the High-street, conducted by Mr. Dick, who publishes the Monthly News Letter—a spirited periodical. Amongst the names of eminence for literature who were natives of Irvine, those of Montgomery and Galt are proudly recorded. Race meetings are held annually in Eglinton Park, in the second week in August, and continue three days. The market is on Monday; and the fairs on the first Wednesday in January, the first Tuesday in May, and the third Wednesday in August.

POST OFFICE, Bridgegate-street, IRVINE, James Arthur Campbell, Post Master.—Letters from LONDON, EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, KILMARNOCK, and IRELAND, arrive every morning at seven and evening at six. and are despatched at twenty minutes past eleven in the forenoon and twenty minutes past five in the evening. Letters from Ayr and Troon arrive at a quarter before twelve noon, and are despatched at twenty minutes past five in the evening.

Letters from ARDROSSAN, SALTCOATS, and KILWINNING, arrive every evening at half-past eight, and are despatched at a quarter-past seven in the morning.

On Sundays the LONDON, EDINBURGH, IRISH, &c. letters arrive at seven in the morning, and are despatched at a quarter-past four in the afternoon. From ARDROSSAN, KILWINNING, &c. at a quarter-past four in the afternoon, and are despatched at a quarter-past seven in the evening.

KILBIRNIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KILBIRNIE, or KILBIRNY, is a thriving and populous village in that parish, district of Cunningham; 64 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 20 s.s.w. of Glasgow, the like distance N. of Ayr, and three from Beith; eligibly situated on the banks of the Garnock, in the heart of a fine country, and within a mile of the loch of Kilbirny, which extends two miles in length by half a mile in breadth, and is well stored with perch, trout and eel. The importance of this village has been greatly augmented of late years by the establishment of three extensive mills—namely, two for the spinning of flax and the manufacture of linen thread, worked respectively by the Messrs. Knox, and Mr. Rettray, and the Kilbirnie Cotton Mills, managed by

Mr. John Dalglish. But of no less consequence to the commercial interest of the village, is the establishment of the 'Glengarnock Iron Works'—an extensive concern, situated about a mile and a quarter to the south-east of Kilbirnie. These works, which employ more than two thousand persons, are superintended by Alexander Cunningham, Esq. the managing partner, assisted by Mr. John Jack, the acting manager. The workmen inhabit a newly-erected village, and the company supply them with the necessities required from a store, and their children with instruction in a school maintained by them. The 'Kilbirnie Iron Foundry' is likewise an extensive and respectable establishment, employing many hands. In Kilbirnie are two good schools—the parochial one, rebuilt in 1849, partly by assessment, assisted by subscriptions; and the Free Church school erected by means of a government grant, aided by subscriptions.

The old castle of Glengarnock is perhaps one of the most ancient, as well as the most stately ruins in Ayrshire: it is supposed to have been the residence of the once famed family of De Morville, which flourished in great splendour during the reigns of Alexander I, David I, Malcolm IV. and William the Lion; they held the high office of constable of Scotland, and were lords of Galloway and Cunningham. There likewise exists the extensive ruin of the old house of Kilbirnie, long the residence of the ancient family of Crawford of Kilbirnie. Some time after the death of George, the last Earl of Crawford, a person came from Ireland, calling himself John Lindsay Crawford, and assuming to be the heir male to the title and estates; this claim excited a great sensation in the country for several years; but the pretender being convicted of vitiating written evidence, in support of his assumption, was transported to Botany Bay for seven years. Upon his return, however, he renewed his demands, and a society of noblemen and gentlemen in London assisted him; but, after a minute and careful investigation, the claim was decided to be unfounded, and was consequently abandoned. This individual having since died, his heirs, not satisfied with the judicial decision which had been pronounced, are, it is said, still pertinaciously litigating their claim to the property. Congregations of the Established Church, the Free Church and the Reformed Presbyterian have their respective temples for worship, and a sect calling themselves Latter Day Saints have a meeting-house. The parish of Kilbirnie contained in 1831, 1,541 inhabitants and in 1841, 2,631.

KILMARNOCK,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF RICCARTON, KILMAURS, FENWICK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILMARNOCK, is a large and important manufacturing town, in the parish of that name, and district of Cunningham; 6½ miles s.w. of Edinburgh (through Glasgow), 21½ s. s. w. from Glasgow, 12 N. by E. from Ayr, and between 6 and 7 E. by N. from Irvine; situated on level ground, near the confluence of the Kilmarnock water with the Irvine. Two centuries ago, this now thriving and populous town was a mere hamlet, dependent upon the baronial castle in its neighbourhood. The advantages of the place, as a site for manufactures, were the presence of coal, healthiness of situation, a populous country around, and abundance of provisions: for many years and generations, however, it seems to have been distinguished only for the production of the broad flat bonnets, so long the characteristic wear of the Scottish lowland peasantry, as also the striped cowls which yet bear the name of the town. As this business increased, the population augmented; and in the year 1731 the number had swelled so much, that the parish church was found inadequate for its accommodation, and a new one was erected. Subsequently, and for a considerable period, the staple manufacture was that of carpets, and in this branch it yet stands pre-eminent. In 1832 the ascertained product of this article amounted to £150,000; it is made of every possible kind and texture, from the plainest to the richest colour and fabric: a few years since the Brussels carpet was successfully imitated; and after that, a variety, termed the three-plied, of extreme beauty and durability was introduced. An extensive trade is carried on in the manufacture of shoes for exportation—likewise in that of leather, for the tanning and dressing of which there are several highly respectable and large establishments. Two breweries, the same number of rope walks, several extensive nurseries grounds, and iron-founding and machine making are found here amongst other branches of industry. One particular description of productive industry and skill seems, however, of late years, to have outstripped all those before mentioned—namely, the making and printing of shawls: for, in the year 1832, the amazing number of 1,128,814 of this denomination of garment issued from the manufactories of this place, amounting in value to upwards of £200,000; the demand since that year greatly increased, but latterly it has materially fallen off. The shops of Kilmarnock are, many of them, very handsome, and well furnished with taste in the various wares suitable to the inhabitants of a large and respectable town. Surrounding the town are extensive coal-fields, from which fuel is obtained for the works of Kilmarnock, besides large supplies transmitted continually by railway to Troon and Irvine, where they are shipped for various places. There are five incorporated trades, namely, the bonnet-makers, skimmers, tailors, shoe makers, and weavers; the first-named is the most ancient—it was incorporated in 1646.

The aspect of the town is agreeable, especially in its central part, where the streets are regularly laid out, and the greater portion of the houses are of freestone; it has of late considerably extended to the south and east, and in these directions has now many elegant edifices. The town-house, built in 1805, contains a court-room for the magistracy, and public offices, besides a lockup for criminals. In 1814 a superb and commodious news-room was erected in the centre of the town, serving the double purpose of a reading room and a place of general resort. Kilmarnock possesses an excellent academy, in which various branches of education are taught by able masters; there are, besides, several private schools of a high character, and many others that impart instruction to children of the poorer classes. The institutions likewise comprise some well-conducted societies, amongst which are the Procurators' and the Merchants'; a philosophical institution, with numerous benefit clubs, associations, and several libraries—amongst the latter is the Kilmarnock library opened in 1797, and now numbers in its collection nearly three thousand volumes. A great object of interest in this town is the observatory erected by its proprietor, Mr.

Thomas Morton, at an expense of £1,000; who also originated many important improvements in the manufacture of carpets. The observatory, which is seventy feet in height, and furnished with valuable telescopes and other apparatus, stands on a fine site, that commands a delightful view of the surrounding country as far as the Frith of Clyde. Mr. Morton has obtained considerable celebrity for his mechanical genius, and has received various honourable testimonials from his countrymen and the Board of Trade, and in 1835, he was elected a member of the Royal Scottish Society of Arts. In 1847 was erected in the market cross, a very handsome monument to the memory of Sir James Shaw, Bart., late Lord Mayor of London, who was a native of Moss-head in this neighbourhood, where he was born in 1774, and died on the 22nd October, 1843. The statue of the deceased is eight feet in height, mounted on a pedestal of the same altitude. The former, which is cut out of a solid block of marble, weighing ten tons, represents him in his civic decorations, as Lord Mayor, and is, altogether, a very fine production of art. The civil government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and eleven councillors; the magistrates preside in their civil and criminal courts by turns, and the justices sit once a fortnight in what is called the small debts court. This town joins with Dumbarton, Port Glasgow, Renfrew, and Rutherglen, in returning one member to parliament: the gentleman at present sitting is the Honourable Edward Pleydell Bouverie. The Duke of Portland is the principal proprietor of Kilmarnock and its neighbouring lands.

Kilmarnock consists of two parishes—the High and the Low—each containing an established church. In the latter parish there has been erected, in addition; a large and handsome edifice, connected with the establishment, possessing accommodation for 1,700 persons: it is ornamented with an admirable Gothic tower, and cost £5,000. In King-street, is a very neatly designed Relief church of recent erection, with an elegant spire; there are likewise three United Presbyterian chapels, and one for Independents, one of the Reformed, with several other places of worship for various religious denominations. In a dry and elevated situation near to Saint Andrew's church, was opened in 1838, a public cemetery, covering one acre of land, purchased by means of a town's rate.

The most remarkable object in this vicinity is the ruin of Dean castle—an ancient, extensive, and well defended mansion, formerly the property of the Earls of Kilmarnock; it stands in a 'dean,' or hollow, less than a mile north from the town; it was burnt down in 1735, from the carelessness of a servant girl, who in preparing some lint for spinning, heedlessly let it catch fire. When in a perfect state, it was considered capable of sustaining a long siege; as it had the means of drawing secret supplies through its subterranean ways, that communicated, it is said, with Coperton castle, two miles distant. Kilmarnock House, another edifice once belonging to, and the last residence of, that noble family, is also in the parish: from this house proceeded the last unfortunate Earl, in 1745, to join the standard of rebellion, which cost him his head. The markets, which are held on Tuesday and Friday, are abundantly supplied with every necessary article of domestic consumption, including grain and cattle. Fairs are held in February ('Fastens-even'), first Tuesday in May, third Wednesday in July (commonly called 'the gooseberry fair'), and the third Wednesday in October—the last three are old style.

The parish of RICCARTON is in the district of Kyle, lying on the left or south bank of the Irvine river, which separates it from Kilmarnock. The village stands on an eminence, a mile to the south of that town, on the right bank; but is almost connected with Kilmarnock by a long street. The parish extends about six miles in length, by between two and three in breadth. The village is remarkable for having been the residence of the venerable Sir Ronald Crawford, the maternal uncle of Wallace, with whom, it is said, the hero sometimes sojourned; and it was to Riccarton that he generally retired after performing any of his very daring exploits, before he openly unfurled his country's banner. On revenging the treacherous murder of his uncle and other chieftains, by burning the barns of Ayr, he took his way by night to this village, accompanied by a few followers; when he reached a certain eminence about six miles from Ayr, he turned round, and, seeing the flames still ascending, exclaimed with stern exultation, 'the barns burn well!' From this laconic expression (tradition adds) the spot obtained the name of 'Burn-weil,' which it still retains. The church at Riccarton is a modern structure, having been erected in 1823; it has a fine steeple, and from its elevated position has an ornamental effect upon the country round. A new bridge across the Irvine materially improves the approach from the Ayr road to Kilmarnock. A considerable quantity of coal is raised in this parish. The Duke of Portland is the principal landed proprietor. Moor-fields tile works, the most extensive in the kingdom, were erected by his grace in February, 1825, since which, more than sixty millions of tiles have been manufactured under the superintendence of Mr. James Taylor, who, in 1836, was awarded the Highland Agricultural Society's prize of a gold medal, for his essay on the manufacture of drainage tiles. Mr. Taylor is also the inventor of a peculiar furnace for tile-kilns, which greatly accelerates the heat and economises the fuel.

KILMAURS is a parish, in the district of Cunningham—the town, a small one, and burgh of barony, is two miles from Kilmarnock, situated on the right bank of a rivulet, called Kilmaurs' water, or 'Carmel water.' It was erected into a burgh of barony by James V, at the instance of Guthbert, Earl of Glencairn, and his son, Lord Kilmaurs. The government of the town is vested in two bailies (chosen annually by the portioners), before whom debts may be recovered. Kilmaurs is composed principally of one street, in the middle of which is a small town-house with a steeple and clock. Formerly this place was somewhat noted for the manufacture of clasp-knives, or 'whittles'—the sharpness of the edge of which instruments gave rise in Ayrshire to a peculiar expression of comparison: a man of acute understanding, and quickness of action, is said to be 'as sharp as a Kilmaurs whittle.' The most prominent trades now are those of shoemaking and weaving, for the Glasgow and Paisley houses. Coal is raised in the parish, the surface of which consists of large level fields, interspersed with gentle declivities and elevations; the summits of the latter are well wooded, and the whole district has a pleasing appearance. There is an old pile of building near to the church, seemingly of very ancient origin; but with respect to its founder, or the date or object of its erection, even tradition itself is silent. In the cemetery of the Glencairn family, adjacent to the church, is a piece of beautiful sculpture, a specimen of the taste and execution of former times, erected as a monument to the memory of the chancellor, William, the ninth Earl. The market, which was for a long period held on Thursday, has fallen into disuse, but fairs are still maintained on the 11th of June, and on the third Wednesday in that month, and the 11th of November.

FENWICK is a parish in the district of Cunningham, about nine miles in length by six in breadth—the kirk-town is cheerfully situated about 3 miles N. by E. from Kilmarnock, on the banks of the Mahernock stream, on the road to Glasgow. There is another village, sometimes called Rose-Fenwick, on the same road, about a quarter of a mile south from the Kirktown. At a former period the district was a fen or moss, and hence it is supposed to have acquired its name; but it has undergone most material improvement, and the greater proportion of the parish is now under cultivation. Guthrie, a noted champion of the Covenant before and after the Restoration, was the minister of this parish; he was a celebrated and very eccentric preacher, distinguished by the title of 'the Fool of Fenwick,' an appellation which even appeared on the title-pages of his published sermons. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and one for an United Presbyterian congregation. Cattle fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday in November.

KILWINNING

Is a parish in the district of Cunningham—the town, a thriving little one of manufacturers, is 24 miles s.w. from Glasgow, 3 n.w. of Irvine, 4 n.e. of Saltcoats, the same distance s. of Dalry, 10 w.n.w. of Kilmarnock, and 5 from Ardrossan—to which there is a railway. It is situated on rising ground, about two miles from the sea; stretching westward from the right bank of the Garnock, and approached through long umbrageous paths, skirted by beautiful fields. The weaving and manufacture of gauzes, muslins, shawls, &c. are carried on, to an important extent, for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, to which they are conveyed by the local agents. There are considerable iron and coal works in the town; a very excellent inn (the Eglinton Arms) and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland. The agricultural produce of the parish is considerable; and coals, which are obtained in abundance, are conveyed by a railway passing from east to west across the parish. The only remarkable objects are, the picturesque ruins of the ancient abbey, founded by Hugh de Morville in 1140: and the beautiful tower of a church, to which its style of architecture bears no resemblance; this tower cost, exclusive of the old materials, the sum of £2,000, raised by subscription, and to which the late Earl of Eglinton was a liberal contributor. The present Earl has a fine mansion in the neighbourhood, called Eglinton Castle. Kilwinning was the first place in Scotland where freemasonry was established; it is said to have been introduced by the foreign architect, who was employed in erecting the monastery here. Besides the distinction acquired from its ancient masonic lodge, it is also remarkable for being the seat of a company of archers, ascertained to have existed so early as the year 1488; and the society at the present day is most respectable. Fairs are held on the 1st of February (new style) and on the first Wednesday after the 18th October (old style).

KIRKMICHAEL, CROSS-HILL AND DALRYMPLE.

KIRKMICHAEL is parish in the district of Carrick—the village is 76 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 22 s. from Kilmarnock, 10 s. of Ayr, the same distance e. of Dalmeillington, 8 n.e. of Dailly, 4 w. by n. from Straiton, and 3½ e. from Maybole; pleasantly situated in a valley, on the road from Newton-Stewart to Glasgow—36 miles from the former, and 44 from the latter. The general surface of this parish is hilly—towards the south and east, mountainous and rocky; but the whole is more or less cultivated, and it possesses several lime quarries. The Girvan runs through the parish—the Doon is its boundary for several miles, and the Dyrock water flows through the village—which latter derives its name from a church that formerly stood here, dedicated to St. Michael; the present religious structure, which is neat and commodious, was built in 1787, on its site. In the churchyard is the tomb of Gilbert M'Adam, who was shot, in 1685, by the laird of Colzean and Ballockmyle, for his adherence to the covenanters. Fairs are held on the third Thursdays in April and August, the second Thursday in September, and the first Thursday in November. The population of the parish (including the small village of Cross-hill) in 1841 was 2,933.

trict of Kyle; pleasantly situated on the banks of the Doon, 4 miles n. from Kirkmichael. The parish, which is about eight miles at its extreme length, and three in breadth, occupies some beautiful undulating and flat land, mostly arable. In the upper portion of the parish is a coal mine, and in some other parts lime abounds. The name Dalrymple is said to be derived from Dalrymole, signifying 'the dale on which the king was slain'; and it is supposed that Coilus, a king of the Britons, was killed in battle at this place; its Gaelic name, however, was Dail-a-Chruim-Puill, or 'dale of the crooked pool.' Near the Roman road, which intersects the parish, was found, in a moss, a vessel of Roman bronze, by antiquarians conjectured to be of that kind used by the priests in their sacrificial oblations; and in 1834 was discovered, near the same spot, an ancient vase; both these relics are in the possession of the Rev. Mr. Wallace, the minister of Dalrymple. In the parish are three British fortlets on commanding sites, and the ruins of three castles: these, with the beautiful loch of Martanham, the waters of which are covered annually with the yellow and white water lily, are objects of considerable interest and curiosity with the visiter to this district.

KIRKOSWALD

Is a parish in the district of Carrick—the village, old and picturesque, is 13 miles s. from Ayr, and 4½ from Maybole; situated on a line of road from Portpatrick to Glasgow—90 miles from the former, and 48 (by the new road) from the latter town. The parish is highly interesting, as containing within its limits several objects of great attraction for the stranger and tourist. The sea coast presents a sandy beach, with a beautiful rich sward to the very sea-mark; and there are two lakes, from whence flow many small streams, that wander through the district towards the sea. Of late years there have been raised various delightful plantations, particularly near the shore around Culzean Castle, the beautiful seat of the Marquess of Ailsa. The mansion, which is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, is placed on a rock overhanging the sea; and on the land side are delicious gardens, with a noble park of great extent. Not far from the castle is a fort, mounted with thirteen guns, and a mortar battery—both kept in effective order. In a low valley, between Kirkoswald and Maybole, are the remains of the abbey of Crossragonnell, founded by Duncan, first Earl of Carrick, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary: at one period it was possessed by Cluniac monks from Paisley; at the Reformation it became the property of the Earl of Cassillis, but it now pertains to Sir James Ferguson, of Kilkerran. From the coast-road between Girvan and Maybole may be seen the ruins of Turnberry Castle, once the residence and property of Robert Bruce. Within view of this memorial of former centuries, and not more than a mile from it, lies the farm of Shanter, once the residence of Douglas Graham, the hero of Burns's poem, 'Tam-o'-Shanter;' though that honour is disputed by some in favour of another farmer, called Thomas Reid. The population of the parish, in 1841, was 2,030.

LARGS AND FAIRLIE.

LARGS is a neat town and sea-bathing place, in the parish of that name; 73 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 14 s. from Greenock, and 20 s. from Irvine; charmingly situated on the Frith of Clyde, in the northern extremity of the county, in a remarkably healthy and well-sheltered district. It is now one of the most favourite retreats on the western coast for ruralising and bathing, the communication with Glasgow, and other large towns on this side of the country, being rendered convenient and expeditious by means of steam boats. During the season it is enlivened by the presence of a great number of visitors; and the general accommodation afforded by the abundance and superior style of the lodging-houses, together with the agreeable manners of the residents, fully entitles it to the extensive patronage it enjoys. An elegant suite of baths was erected, by public subscription, in 1816, some of them after the model of those at Seafeld, Leith; and there is one vapour bath: attached to these is a reading-room, supplied with various papers. There are two superior inns: the 'Brisbane Arms' is a posting-house also, and is conducted in a manner that causes it to be much frequented. Considerable business is carried on in the fishery; and formerly the fair, held on Saint Colum's day, was a scene of bustle and active traffic—it was attended by the people from the Highlands, who used to resort hither to exchange their produce for that of the lowland trader.

The parish church, a handsome structure of stone, with a spire and clock, is a great ornament to the town. There are several benevolent societies, and two Sabbath schools, which form the principal charitable institutions. Two circulating libraries afford literary amusement to domestic readers; and a company of comedians generally attend during the summer. Few districts possess more romantic scenery: the old castles of Kilmory, Shelmurly, Knock, and Fairley, with Brisbane House, ornament the parish. It was on the plain of Largs that the celebrated battle was fought between the Scots and the Danes, in their last invasion of this country, in 1263. The glen, near Kelburn—the cascade, which has a fall of fifty feet perpendicular—and various other natural beauties, arrest the attention and excite the admiration of the traveller. A fair is held on the first Tuesday in June (old style), which lasts three days.

FAIRLIE, or Fairley, is a small village. in the parish of, and about two miles south from, Largs. In the vicinity is Kelburne Castle, the picturesque seat and family mansion of the Earl of Glasgow; likewise the ancient square tower of Fairlie Castle, formerly a seat of a family of that name. The extensive plantations around Kelburne Castle are highly ornamental to the general landscape. There are, besides, some very elegant villas, which harmonize with and adorn the prevalent features of the parish; and the marine scenery is truly beautiful and enlivening.

MAYBOLE AND THE VILLAGE OF CULROY.

MAYBOLE is a small, neat market and post town, the capital of its parish, in the district of Carrick; 87 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 52 n. by E. from Portpatrick, 44 s.s.w. from Glasgow, 25 n. from Ballantrae, 22 s. by w. from Kilmarnock, 12 n. by E. from Girvan, and between 8 and 9 s. from Ayr. It lies in a charming part of the country, on the face of a gentle eminence with a southern exposure, and surrounded by lovely scenery, formed of parks, highly cultivated, and hill and dale, with a sea-view of the 'busy Frith of Clyde' opening on the west. Maybole was created a free burgh of barony in November, 1516, on a grant to

Gilbert Earl of Cassilis, the patron, and to the provost and prebendaries of the collegiate church of Maybole, to which belonged the lands whereon the town stands. In October, 1639, an act, ordaining the head court of Carrick to be held at Maybole, was passed by the Lords of the Articles. The streets of the town are narrow, and contain no eminently fine places or public buildings; several of the dwellings, now inhabited by weavers, bear a venerable aspect, and doubtless were, at a distant period, the domiciles of more dignified personages. The mansion-house or castle of the Cassilis family is the finest surviving specimen of the winter seats formerly existing in Maybole: it is a stately well-built structure, standing at the east end of the town, and is said to have been the residence of the repudiated Countess of Cassilis. It is now occupied by Thomas Dykes, Esq. factor to the Marquess of Ailsa. The building now used as the town hall belonged to the Kennedys of Blairquhar. The principal business carried on here is weaving for the Glasgow houses, in which branch there are many local agents employed, and many families busily occupied.

The collegiate church has been for some time in ruins, and the ground appropriated as a private cemetery for the Cassilis family. The parish church, a Quoad Sacra, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians, are the places of worship. The parochial school dispenses instruction to about one hundred and seventy boys and girls, who are taught all the useful, and some of the polite branches of literature; there are also an industrial and a ragged school. Yearly and quarterly meetings of the 'Carrick farmers' society are held in the town-hall; the annual one is on the first Thursday of August, and the quarterly on the first Thursday in the months of February, May and November; the quarterly in August merges in the yearly assemblage. A 'Knox' club was instituted in 1824, for the purpose of commemorating the zealous exertions of that extraordinary man. In the vicinity are many interesting objects, among which is the celebrated ruin called Crossreguel (noticed in the sketch of Kirkoswald), and Kilhenzie castle, now in a similar state of dilapidation, once belonging to a branch of the Cassilis family, who were for a long period hereditary bailies of Carrick. Ancient coins have been frequently found in considerable numbers. In the neighbourhood are two remarkably fine springs of water, popularly named 'St. Cuthbert's' and 'Well-trees'; the latter is said to yield ten thousand imperial gallons per hour. The market is held on Thursday; the following are the annual fairs—Candlemas fair, the second Thursday of February; Beltan fair, the second Tuesday of May; Lammas fair, the second Tuesday of August; and Hallow fair, the second Tuesday of November.

CULROY is a small village, in the parish of Maybole, three miles and a half from that town, on the road to Ayr, from which it is five miles and a half distant. A manufactory for woollen goods is established in this village.

MUIRKIRK

Is a parish in Kyle district—the village, a thriving and considerable one, is 50 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s. from Glasgow, 26 e. by n. from Ayr, 24 s.e. from Kilmarnock, and 16 n.w. from Sanquhar; situated near the right bank of the water of Ayr, at the junction of the roads leading from Glasgow to Dumfries, and from Edinburgh to Ayr; and in a district rude and bleak—the land being but partially reclaimed from its original mossy and moorish character: another considerable portion is, however, profitably employed in grazing and pasture, and in 1835 the black-faced sheep fed in this parish carried the Highland Society's prize. Though nature has not here been bountiful to the farmer, or encouraged the labours of the agriculturist, she has been abundantly kind to the miner—for coal, iron and limestone are liberally dispensed throughout the territory. At the ' Muirkirk Iron Company's' works are three blast furnaces constantly in operation, for the manufacture of pig iron; the malleable description is also produced here, both in a rolled and hammered state. There are, besides, extensive tile and lime works, belonging to the Duke of Portland, who, with Lord Douglas and the Honourable Colonel Cathcart, are the principal proprietors of the land in this parish. Its length is nine miles, by an average breadth of about six; bounded on the north-east by Douglas, on the east by Kirkcubbin, on the south by Cumnock, and on the west by London. In the village are two libraries, which are well conducted, and the like number of good inns. Fairs are held in the months of July, August, and December.

NEW CUMNOCK

It is a parish in the Kyle district—the village is 43 miles s. of Glasgow, 21 s. s. E. of Kilmarnock, the same distance w. by s. of Ayr, 10 n. by E. of Dalmellington, 12 w. by n. of Sanquhar, 24 n. w. of Thornhill, and 5 s. E. of Cumnock. The parish, which lies on the eastern boundary of that of Cumnock (or Old Cumnock) is in general hilly, and affords excellent pasture for sheep; but there are many spots of rich arable land. The river Nith takes its rise in the south-west end of the parish, and runs through the centre of the whole; and there are several small lakes, the sources of the Lagar and Afton. Various mines of coal are worked in this neighbourhood, the property of the Marquess of Bute, James Menteth, Esq., and Miss Stewart. Black lead is also procured here, of a quality suitable for pencils; and lime abounds in different parts of the district. About a mile south of the village are the Nithsdale Iron Works, superintended by Mr. Forster Shaw, the managing partner. A new church was erected in 1833—a neat and well-adapted building, sufficiently capacious for a congregation of a thousand persons; there are likewise a Free church, a dissenting meeting-house, a parochial school, and a free school. A subscription library was established in 1828; it contains upwards of six hundred volumes. Some years since a new road was formed, about four miles in length, up the glen of Afton; by continuing the line six miles farther, a communication would be effected between this part of Ayrshire and the adjoining county of Galloway, which would shorten the present distance by twelve miles—all carriages being now obliged to take the circuitous route of Dalmellington. The traces of an old castle, the fosse and ditch of which alone remains, are observable in this neighbourhood. It is said to have been the residence of Sir William Wallace, and was then called the 'Castle of Black Bogue.' The Free church stands on this site. A cattle fair is held in the village, on the Thursday immediately preceding Whitsuntide.

NEWMILNS AND DARVEL.

NEWMILNS is a neat market and manufacturing town, and burgh of barony, in the parish of Loudoun, district of Cunningham; 24 miles S. of Glasgow, 18 N.E. of Ayr, 7 E. by S. of Kilmarnock, and 16 N. of Cumnock; situated on the bank of the river Irvine, about two miles east from the village of Galston. It was made a burgh of barony by King James IV, in 1490; and the charter was confirmed by Sir Matthew Campbell, of Loudoun, in 1566. The bailies are competent to hold courts, from which there is no appeal, except to the court of session; and in other respects their jurisdiction is as ample as that of most royal burghs. There is a police commission for the better regulation and improvement of the town, consisting of seven members; the chief magistrate is the chief commissioner. The Marquess of Hastings is superior of the burgh; Thomas Brown, Esq. of Waterhaugh, has also considerable property here, and is superior of a neighbouring village called GREENHOLM. The weaving of muslin is carried on here extensively—one thousand hands being employed in this branch of manufacture. The places of worship are an Established Church, a Free Church, and a meeting-house of the United Secession body. The parochial school, and a Sabbath evening school, are both well attended: in the latter more than three hundred children of the working classes receive instruction.

In the centre of the town is seen the remains of an old castle, said to have been erected as early as that of Edinburgh, but record is silent or obscure concerning its ancient possessors. Within the parish, and about a mile and a half from the town, is Loudoun Castle, the elegant seat of the Marquess of Hastings: it is a large and magnificent castellated pile, standing amidst beautiful natural woods and tasteful artificial plantations. Near the mansion is the old parish kirk of Loudoun, bearing the early date of 615. The only part now standing is that which formed the choir, and is now the place of sepulture of the noble families of Loudoun and Hastings; and here rest the remains of the lamented Lady Flora Hastings, whose death, in the prime of life, caused such a mournful sensation, as connected with the court of her present majesty. The market, which is on Thursday and Saturday, is plentifully supplied with articles of general consumption. A fair is held on the second Monday in May.

DARVEL is a small village, in the same parish as Newmilns. In this neighbourhood is Loudoun Castle, before noticed; and the woods and braes of Loudoun furnish a theme for one of Tannahill's best songs. The Marchioness of Hastings benevolently erected a school in this village, and it is still maintained by the family.

OCHILTREE

IS a small but pleasant village; in the parish of that name, district of Kyle; 64 miles s. w. from Edinburgh, 49 n. w. from Dumfries, 37 s. from Glasgow, 28 n. by e. from Girvan, 22 n. w. from Sanquhar, 16 s. from Kilmarnock, the like distance n. e. from Maybole, 11½ e. from Ayr, and 4 from Old Cumnock; situated on the south side of the Lugar water, and on the high road from Ayr to Dumfries and Edinburgh. The country around is delightfully picturesque; and the face of the parish, which is pretty level, with some agreeable undulations, is well watered. The weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow market gives employment to several hands; the making of snuff boxes, to a limited extent, is carried on here; and there are considerable manufactories for shearing-hooks. The great Scottish reformer, John Knox, married his second wife at this village; she was the daughter of Lord Ochiltree, who at that period resided at Ochiltree house, now the mansion of the Dowager Lady Boswell. Ochiltree formerly gave a Baron's title to a branch of the family of Stewart. The church, like most others in this part of the county, is a plain building. The Parochial and Free schools are well attended; and there is a subscription library well selected. Fairs are held on the second Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday in November, for cattle.

SALTCOATS AND STEVENSTON.

SALTCOATS is a sea-port, partly in the parish of Stevenston and partly in that of Ardrossan; 74 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 19 n. from Ayr, 14 w. by n. from Kilmarnock, and one from Ardrossan—to which latter there is a railway; eligibly situated on the Frith of Clyde, near to its northern extremity. The general appearance of the town is by no means prepossessing; but its situation and proximity to Ardrossan, the arrival and departure of the trading vessels, and the passing and repassing of the different steam packets and railway carriages, all contribute to give life to this ancient place. Formerly Salt-cots was the name of this town, and it then consisted only of a small number of cots or cottages, the inhabitants of which obtained a livelihood by making salt in kettles; but at the beginning of the last century, a harbour being constructed for the convenience of shipment of coal, the produce of the mines in this neighbourhood, the little hamlet began to assume the semblance of a village; it is but in recent years, however, that it has risen to any note. During the war it possessed an extensive trade, and ship-building was carried on with great spirit; but since the peace its commerce has been much reduced, and it is now nearly confined to the importation of timber, and the exportation of coals to Ireland. The manufacture of salt is considerable, and many looms are employed in weaving muslins, &c. for the Glasgow and Paisley houses. Both at the east and west of the town are extensive chemical works, belonging to Messrs. Burns & Son, who manufacture magnesia and Epsom salts. The town-house, the foundation of which was laid in 1825, consists of a spacious hall, with two smaller apartments adjoining, and a lock-up for prisoners: the edifice, which is surmounted by a steeple, is a prominent and effective object when approaching the town. A justice court, for the recovery of small debts, sits here once a month. The Ayrshire Bank has a branch in Saltcoats, which occupies a handsome building, and there is a savings' bank.

The places of worship comprise an Established Church, a Free Church, three for United Presbyterians and a Baptist meeting-house. The children of the town have the advantage of free, parochial, and Sabbath schools, and of a library of religious and moral works. There are several benefit societies, which alleviate the sufferings and relieve the necessities of the poor. An annual fair is held on the last Thursday in May.

STEVENSTON is a village one mile north-east from Saltcoats, and two south-west from Kilwinning. It consists chiefly of one street, half a mile in length, and derives its name from Stephen, or Steven, the son of Richard, who obtained a grant of lands from Richard Morville, constable of Scotland; the latter, a very celebrated man, died in 1189: under this grant Steven settled here, and gave his patrimonial designation to the place. The parish abounds with coal and freestone, of which large quantities are annually shipped. The dairy and agricultural produce, comprising cheese, butter, wheat, oats, and potatoes, is likewise of considerable value. A great portion of the inhabitants of the village are employed in weaving, and through the agents here the works of their looms are conveyed to the Glasgow houses. The present church is a neat and handsome building, of modern erection. The old church belonged formerly to the monks of Kilwinning. Fairs are held on the second Friday in August and the 31st October.

STEWARTON, DUNLOP AND NEIGHBOURHOODS,

STEWARTON is a parish in the district of Cunningham—the town, one of manufactures, is 16 miles s. by w. from Glasgow, 8 n. from Irvine, 6 n from Kilmarnock, and 3 from Fenwick; situated in a pleasant part of the county, on the bank of the water of Annock. The parish, which is about ten miles in length, and varying from three to four in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, highly cultivated and improved, and adorned by several tastefully laid out seats of the gentry. For centuries Stewarton remained an inconsiderable and obscure village; and it is only of a comparatively recent date that, owing to the general extension of trade and manufactures, it has increased to its present dimensions and consequence. It has, however, been long distinguished for the production of Highland or tartan and other bonnets, especially of regimental bonnets or caps: this business, which is chiefly carried on domestically, and partially in factories, furnishes employment to from three hundred to four hundred hands. The manufacture of carpets, which was very considerable some fifteen years ago, has greatly declined, and the only factory now in operation is that of Messrs. Muir and Black. The manufacture or forging of clock-work, for which this town is peculiar in North Britain, is a trade of some significance, as it forms an item of exportation to the continent of Europe and America. Several woollen mills are engaged in carding and spinning for the carpet and bonnet trades; the largest concern is that belonging to Alexander Kerr, Esq. of Robertland, and occupied by Messrs. Muir & Black before mentioned, who have a steam-engine for propelling the machinery, on the occurrence of droughts or frosts. A large portion of the population consists of silk and muslin weavers, who are employed by the Glasgow and Paisley establishments; linens and damasks are also issued from the Stewarton loom to some extent; and in the ingenious pursuit of 'Ayrshire needlework,' not fewer than four hundred females enjoy the fruits of industry. The Ayrshire Banking Company and the Western Bank of Scotland have branches here, and there is a bank for savings—this latter institution, together with several benefit or friendly societies, create a stimulus to the spirit of diligence and frugality in the working classes. The invention of 'portable bee boxes' by a Mr. Kerr, of this town, has proved a great advantage in the management of bees. These boxes are so constructed as to prevent 'swarming,' and to produce a very superior honey and comb; it obtains a much higher price in the markets than any other kind, and is known by the name of 'Stewarton honey.' In this thriving little town regular district courts are held on the first Thursday of each month, for the recovery of small debts, and such business as falls under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the parishes of Stewarton, Dunlop and Fenwick.

The places of worship are Established and Free Churches, and for United Presbyterians and Independents. There are Free Church and Parochial schools and some private academies. The market is held on Thursday. Fairs on the Thursday next, before the first Friday in January (o.s.), for the sale of horses, cattle, and farm and dairy produce; on the Monday preceding the first Thursday in May, for the like commodities and for stock and agricultural and dairy utensils, also for hiring servants; and on the Wednesday before the last Thursday in October, for fat cattle, horses, and farm and dairy produce, also for hiring servants.

DUNLOP is a small village, two miles and a half from Stewarton; seated romantically on the banks of the Swinsy, about three hundred yards of the road leading from Kilmarnock to Paisley; and when seen from a little distance through the trees which embosom it has an agreeable retired appearance. The houses being mostly old, and the street narrow, it does not improve on a nearer view, though in this respect it does not suffer by comparison with other places of similar rank throughout the country. A new and handsome church erected in 1835, is ornamental to the neighbourhood; its predecessor suffered much from the combined effects of age and weather. In the churchyard is a small arched chamber, formed under the direction of Lord Viscount Clanaboyes, in 1641, over the grave of his father, the Rev. Hans

Hamilton, who, for forty-five years was minister of the parish; it contains a well-executed monument in marble, justly deserving attention.

The parish, to which the village gives name, lies principally in the bailiery of Cunningham, and county of Ayr; but on the north it extends into Renfrewshire. It has long been noted for the excellent quality of its cheese, which bears a high character throughout Scotland. About the close of the seventeenth century one Barbara Gilmour is said to have commenced the practice of making cheese from the entire milk, nothing but skimmed milk having been used in the process, in this district, previous to that period; at present all the cheese similarly made in the western counties receives the appellation of 'Dunlop'; about 25,000 stones imperial are made in the parish annually. There is also a considerable trade in meal carried on by the inhabitants of the village and the surrounding territory. Dunlop House, in this parish, the seat of Thos. Dunlop Douglas, Esq., is one of the handsomest mansions in the county: on this estate, resting on a small knoll, is a stone of large dimensions, called the 'O'Great Stone,' supposed to have been employed in some ancient rites of worship. Two fairs for the sale of dairy stock, are held—one about the middle of May, the other on the 12th of November; both are generally well attended.

STRAITON AND PATNA.

STRAITON is a parish, in Carrick district—the village, a neat one, is 80 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 26 s. from Kilmarnock, 14 s. by e. from Ayr, the same distance N.E. from Girvan, 8 E.S.E. from Maybole, the same distance N.E. from Dailly, and 6 s.w. from Dalmeilington; finely situated on the banks of the Girvan, and on the road leading from Glasgow to Newton-Stewart—48 miles s. by w. from the former, and 30 n. from the latter town. The parish, which extends about fifteen miles in length by five in breadth, consists for the most part of pasture land, the surface, especially in the south-east, being wild and rocky, interspersed with a number of small lakes; there is, however, a considerable supply of natural wood, and several extensive plantations; and, besides the Girvan and lakes, it is watered by the Doon. The inhabitants are for the most part occupied in agricultural labour, a few at a neighbouring tile works, and some find employment in weaving. About half a mile south of the village are the vestiges of an oblong entrenchment, from which an extensive view is commanded; about this spot, the artificial work on which must be presumed to be of Roman origin, various ancient relics have been found, particularly two carved vases, or urns, containing ashes. The Marquess of Ailsa, the Honble. Colonel F. M. Cathcart, Sir James Ferguson, and Sir David Hunter Blair, are the proprietors of the land. Straiton has a neat parish church, a parochial school, and a female school, the latter built at the expense of, and principally maintained by Lady H. Blair.

PATNA is a small village, in the parish of Straiton, situated on the banks of the Doon, which abounds with trout. Lime and coal are obtained plentifully in this neighbourhood, and furnishes employment to many of the villagers. The Honble. Mrs. Leslie is proprietor of the land about here. A chapel and school, in connexion with the established church, and the Relief body, have a place of worship.

TARBOLTON, FAILFORD, STAIR, AND JOPPA.

TARBOLTON is a parish in the district of Kyle—the village (or town) is 12 miles S. E. from Irvine, 8 S. from Kilmarnock, and 7 N. E. from Ayr; situated about five miles from the shore of the Frith of Clyde, surrounded by a fine country, and occupying a considerable space of ground. In the reign of the second Charles, it was erected into a burgh of barony, and granted to John Cunningham, Esq., of Enterkine. The parish church is rather an elegant structure, (with a beautiful spire, surmounted by a clock having four dials); it was completed in 1821, at a cost of upwards of £2,500. The parish is about seven and a half miles in length, and its average breadth about four and a half. The Duke of Portland, W. A. Cunningham, Esq. — Hunter, Esq. of Blairquhan, Hugh Hamilton, Esq. of Pinmore, James Campbell, Esq., of Craigie, and Colonel Neil, of of Swinridge muir, are the principal heritors. The fairs are held on the first Monday in May, the first Tuesday after the 11th of June, and the first Wednesday in November.

The parish of STAIR is in the district of Kyle, lying

TROON, DUNDONALD, AND SYMINGTON.

TROON, an excellent and improving sea-port, in the parish of Dundonald, is situated 75 miles s. w. from Edinburgh, 31 s. w. from Glasgow, 6 s. from Irvine, and 9 s. w. from Kilmarnock—to which latter town there is a railway. Under the patronage of His Grace the Duke of Portland, this place has advanced steadily to a degree of eminence, and bids fair to become one of the most important sea-ports on the west coast of Scotland. Possessing uncommon natural advantages, in having an extensive bay and a secure harbour, into which vessels of great burthen can confidently enter with the wind from almost any point, Troon is obviously destined to attain a high rank in maritime estimation. It has two superior dry docks for repairing vessels, large storehouses, a lighthouse, a ship-building yard, and a rope and sail manufactory. From the extremity of the harbour directly to Kilmarnock runs a railway, on which immense quantities of coal are conveyed from the neighbourhood of the latter town, and from hence shipped for Ireland, &c. The town is progressively enlarging; and, in addition to the prosperity derived from its commerce as a port, it enjoys the advantage of being visited, in the bathing season, by numerous respectable families—for whose accommodation handsome lodging houses have been built. The 'Portland Arms Hotel' stands deservedly high in estimation, from its commodiousness, and excellent management by Mrs. Douglas. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church, and a chapel for United Presbyterians; and the public schools are a parochial and an auxiliary.

DUKDONALD is a parish on the sea-coast, in the district of Carrick, extending eight miles along the shore, from the water of Irvine toward the south—the village, situated about four miles and a quarter from Troon, contains a church of the Establishment. Dundonald Castle is a ruin of great celebrity, and occupies an elevated and commanding situation, within a mile of the sea.

SYMINGTON parish is in Kyle district, bounded by Monkton on the south, and Dundonald on the north—the village being about two miles from the latter, where is the parish church. The lands in this district were held, at a remote period, under Walter, the first Stewart, by Symon Loccard, from whom the place originally obtained the name which it bears at the present day.

WEST KILBRIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

WEST KILBRIDE is a parish, in the district of Cunningham—the village is 73 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 24 s.w. from Paisley, the like distance n. from Ayr, 23 s. from Greenock, 19 n.w. from Kilmarnock, 12 n. from Irvine,  $7\frac{1}{2}$  s. from Largs, 7 s.w. from Dalry, 5 n. from Saltcoats, the same distance s. from Fairlie, and 4 n.w. from Ardrossan; surrounded on all sides by rising grounds, which on the west protect it from the keen sea breezes, and on the opposite aspect from easterly winds. The scenery around is bold and romantic, interspersed with several genteel and handsome residences. The ruins of Law castle and of Porten-cross are in the immediate vicinity of the village, and are both objects of interest to the curious in architectural relics. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving, in which about one hundred and forty looms are engaged. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, an United Presbyterian, and a Congregational chapel. The parochial school, a most useful institution, affords education upon very moderate terms to those who are enabled to pay, and gratuitously to such as are not blessed with the means of doing so. There is an excellent school also connected with the Free church, and the village supports a considerable library. The parish extends six miles along the shore of the Firth of Clyde, and inland from two to three miles. The district, independent of the ruins already mentioned, possesses other attractive vestiges of antiquity; and it is worthy of remark that, off the sea line of the parish, one of the largest vessels composing the Spanish Armada remains sunk in ten fathoms water: an attempt was made about a century since, to examine the internal condition of this ship, and the operation succeeded so far that a piece of ordnance was raised from her hulk.

BANFFSHIRE.

THIS county, which is one of no great extent, is bounded on the north by the Frith of Moray, on the south and on the east by Aberdeenshire, and on the west by the shires of Moray and Inverness. Its form is elongated—irregularly concave towards its south-eastern border, and convex on its north-eastern, with a slip or apex inserted between the counties of Moray and Aberdeen: in breadth, at its widest part, it is about twenty miles, and its extreme length fifty; it diminishes to an apex (as before stated) at the extreme western end, but the base on the coast extends twenty-five miles. The course of the Deveron, for a considerable distance, forms the eastern boundary between this county and that of Aberdeen; and the Spey, with little impropriety, may be accounted its western limit with Morayshire. This district was at one time a component part of the large province of Moray, which altogether forms one of the finest tracts of ground in the northern part of Scotland. On the eastern side of the Deveron, in the district of Buchan, the parish of Gamrie and some other spots of land belong to Banffshire; so that, in all, the county presents a superficies of somewhat above one thousand square miles.

SOIL, SURFACE AND CLIMATE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The SOIL, with few exceptions, is deep loam or tenacious clay. The face of the county is agreeably diversified by an intermixture of valleys and flat ground, among the ranges of hills, with many beautiful fertile braes, productive of the finest crops, or serviceable for the excellence of their green pasture. The Strath of Glen-Avon proceeds from the forest of Glen-Avon, in a north-easterly direction, or on the left, and Strath Deveron on the right. Betwixt these is Glen-Livet, from whence, in a north-easterly direction, diverges Glen-Feddick. The principal eminences in the county are—Noath, 1,830; Buck, or Cabrach, 2,377; Knockhill, 2,500; Corryhabbie, 2,558; Belrinnes, 2,747; and Cairngorm, 4,244 feet above the level of the sea. The principal crops raised are barley, oats, turnips, potatoes, flax, grass, and in some places a small extent of pease. Under the auspices of parliamentary commissioners, the county of late years has experienced considerable improvement, and been opened by new roads. Limestone may be quarried beneath the surface of nearly the whole county; and at Portsoy is a fine vein of serpentine stone, called 'Portsoy marble,' as well as a species of granite, which, when polished, exhibits the resemblance of Hebrew characters. Freestone, marl and slate are also found in various parts. The first MANUFACTURE introduced into this district still subsists, with an almost equal operation throughout the county—this is the spinning of flax, for the merchants of Glasgow, Paisley, Dundee, and Aberdeen; the manufacture of thread, both white and dyed, is also carried on, but not very extensively. The curing of fish is a branch of some consequence in the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Portsoy; and there are distilleries in several of the principal towns. The chief articles of export are black cattle, oats, salted or dried cod, ling, haddock and skate; the salmon of the Spey and Deveron, put together, are also an article of great consideration. The imports may be, in general, comprised under the necessities and luxuries of life, not produced in the county. The CLIMATE of Banffshire is precarious. In the hilly districts, all the evils of cold and rain are often felt; and as frosts and snows frequently set in without any interval of good weather, the harvests are not only endangered, but the operations of husbandry are suspended for many of the winter months. The lower part of the shire, from Duff-house to Forglen, and Kinnairdy (a tract of about twelve miles along the river side), and from Banff to Gordon castle, including the districts of Boyne and Enzie, must be excepted, being nearly equal to the climate of Moray, and greatly surpassing the most part of the county in the fertility of the soil, the improvement of its agriculture, and the richness of its productions.

RIVERS, &c.—The waters of this county are the SPEY, the LIVET, the AVON, the FEDDICK, the DEVERON, the ISLA, the CONGLAS, and several more minute streams. The Deveron is not navigable; but this, as well as the Spey, yields excellent salmon fishing, and as such is the source of much comfort and wealth to the inhabitants. Along the coast there are a number of rivulets, which fall with a quick descent, and are useful in propelling machinery in different little towns and villages where manufactures are established, or have begun to make their appearance.

Banffshire comprehends twenty-eight parishes, or parts of parishes (some extending into, and others locally situate in, other counties); and it contains two royal burghs, BANFF and CULLEN: these are also contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate). One member represents the shire at large.

BANFF

IS a burgh of barony, the capital of the county and of the parish of its name; 155 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh (by the nearest route, and 177 by the mail road), 80 E. of Inverness, 46 N. by W. of Aberdeen, 35 E. of Elgin, 25 E. by N. of Fochabers, 13 E. of Cullen, and 8 E. by S. of Portsoy; pleasantly situate on the side of a hill overlooking the west bank of the Deveron and its confluence with the sea. This town was part of the ancient thanedom of Boin, whence the name seems to be derived—for, in some old charters, it is written Boineffe, and Baineffe. Tradition says it was founded by Malcolm Canmore, in 1163; and it was erected into a royal burgh in 1372, by Robert II, who endowed it with the same privileges, and placed it on the same footing, as Aberdeen. It is governed by a provost, four bailies, and twelve councillors. Besides quarterly sessions, justice of the peace courts are held on the first Monday in every month. Banff, in conjunction with Cullen, Elgin, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, returns one member to parliament: the gentleman at present sitting is George Skene Duff, Esq.

The town comprises several well-built streets, and, although rather old-fashioned in appearance, is remarkably clean and neat. The principal street, which is handsome, is ornamented with a suitable modern town-house, surmounted by an elegant spire; and there are public baths, a museum, a reading-room, and libraries. The river Deveron, which abounds with salmon, is here crossed by a substantially constructed bridge of seven arches, which gives access to the seaport of Macduff. From the bridge a fine view is obtained on looking up the water, of Duff House, the seat of the Earl of Fife, rising out of a beautiful park, surrounded by an apparently interminable wilderness of trees, which together are said to comprise a circumference of fourteen miles. The elegant mansion is partly in the Corinthian and partly in the Composite style of architecture, and the front is elaborately decorated with sculpture. The interior is replete with curiosities, and embellished with an extensive collection of paintings by the most celebrated foreign and British artists. The gates of this charming demesne are unreservedly thrown open to the public, who are generously permitted to roam through the delightful walks and glades, surrounded by fine timber, the choicest shrubs, evergreens, and flowers.

The inner harbour of Banff is secure, but has not a great depth of water. The outer basin, which is defended by a pier and breakwater, is likewise deficient in depth, except at the entrance; nor is it eligible as a haven of protection for vessels in stormy weather. A Morton's patent slip apparatus is here fitted up, and is frequently in operation. The number of vessels from the port of Banff is 134; the aggregate burden of which is 11,161 tons. The chief trade, of an export nature, comprises salmon, herring, and other fish; some individuals are employed in the necessary process of curing. There is a respectable distillery. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a neat modern erection; a free church, and chapels belonging to Episcopalians, Seceders, Independents, Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists, &c. Banff Academy ranks high as an educational institution; and, independent of other superior scholastic establishments, there are charity schools for children of the humbler classes. A castle of considerable strength and magnitude formerly raised its feudal battlements over this spot; but, of all that might convey a conception of its grandeur or importance, no vestige remains but part of the ancient wall, the moat, and traces of the entrenchments; a modern mansion now occupies part of its site. In this town and its neighbourhood are the residences of a great number of wealthy and respectable families, who contribute materially to the support of the place, and diffuse the blandishments of politeness and fashion throughout its society. The weekly market is held on Friday, and one for corn every alternate week on that day. Fairs,—Brandon fair on the first Tuesday in February (old style); on the 20th of May, if it falls on a Tuesday, otherwise on the first Tuesday after the 26th; Lammas fair on Lammas-day (old style); and Christmas fair on Christmas-day (old style.)

BUCKIE, RATHVEN, PORT GORDON, PORTEASIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BUCKIE is a village, or small town, and flourishing fishing station, in the parish of Rathven, 20 miles w. from Banff, 7 s. from Fochabers, and 6 w. from Cullen, situated on both sides of the burn (or brook) of Buckie; one part belonging to Colonel Gordon, of Clunie, the other to Sir William Gordon, of Letterfourie. The inhabitants are mainly engaged in fishing, and are famed throughout Scotland for their industry, and hardihood in braving the perils of their avocation; as a natural consequence, their services are eagerly sought at the several herring-fishing stations on the Moray Frith. The only harbour is a small basin excavated out of the rocky shore, and sheltered by a slight timber breakwater.

The places of worship are the parish church, a chapel of ease, an episcopal chapel, and a free church—the latter, a handsome building, in the Elizabethan style, has been erected chiefly through the praiseworthy instrumentality of the Rev. Robert Shanks, its respected minister.

PORT GORDON is a village on the sea-coast, about a mile west from Buckie. Its inhabitants are exclusively occupied in fishing and the ship coasting trade; they employ stake and bag nets for the capture of salmon, which are here abundant, being in the immediate vicinage of Speymouth. A large quantity of corn is shipped annually from this port, and it is hence that the district, to a considerable extent inland, is supplied with coals and salt. A narrow rivulet separates this village from that of Port Tannachie.

PORTEASIE (or Portessie), is a small coast village, about a mile east from Buckie; it is of some consequence as a boat-building station.

The parish of RATHVEN extends about 10 miles along the coast of the Moray Frith, by from 3 to 5 in breadth. The greater proportion of the land is hill, moss, and moor, but the more level parts, near the sea, are arable and fertile, being greatly enriched by sea manure; and in some parts the eye is relieved by the appearance of thriving plantations. Throughout the district the supply of limestone, sandstone, and slate is abundant; and the memorials of antiquity are numerous, the Danish 'cairn' being the most general.

CULLEN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

CULLEN is a royal burgh, a maritime town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 191 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh, 22 E. of Elgin, 13 N.E. of Fochabers, 14 W. of Banff, and 6 W. of Portsoy; situated on a commanding eminence, overlooking the Moray Frith. Until within the last thirty years it consisted of three independent and distinct towns:—the NEW TOWN, near the sea, with a harbour; the AULD TOWN, more inland, and adjoining to the parks of Cullen House; and the FISH TOWN, a low village, exclusively inhabited by fishermen and their families. The Auld Town no longer exists, and the park of the Earl of Seafield occupies its site: to this nobleman the town is indebted for those improvements and modern erections which have conferred upon it that aspect of neatness and respectability so apparent, and raised it to the rank of the third town in the shire. The curing of fish and its exportation when dried is carried on by several of the inhabitants. Besides these occupations, a branch of the Aberdeen Banking Company, three insurance company's agents, and a good inn, are the principal establishments.

The acting magistrates are the provost, three bailies, with a treasurer, dean of guild, and thirteen councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Elgin, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning a member to parliament: the gentleman at present sitting is George Skene Duff, Esq.

An elegant temple of stone was some few years since erected upon an elevated spot of ground, very near the sea, and not far from Cullen House; this latter is an ancient and irregular edifice; the interior is, however, furnished with modern taste, and adorned with paintings by the most eminent masters. Cullen stream passes under the south walls; and on the opposite side are the park and pleasure-grounds, which are connected with the house by an elegant arch of eighty-four feet span. Not far distant are the ruins of a dwelling in which Elizabeth, queen of Robert Bruce, is said to have died. An eminence, called Castle Hill, at the western extremity of the town, is the site of an ancient fortification, which must formerly have been a place of great strength: an almost perpendicular rock renders it inaccessible from the north, and it is surrounded in every other direction by a deep ditch; it is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, as vitrified stones have been frequently extracted from beneath the surface. Fairs are held on the 7th January, the third Friday in May, and second Friday in November (new style).

DUFFTOWN IN MORTLACH.

DUFFTOWN is a village of modern date (having been erected within the last five and thirty years), in the parish of Mortlach; 118 miles N. of Edinburgh, 49 N.W. of Aberdeen, 29 S.W. of Banff, 14 N.E. of Inverness, and 4 S. of Aberlour; situated a short way to the north of the old decayed hamlet of Mortlach, near the junction of the Dullan and the Fiddich waters. The village is rapidly improving in appearance, extent, and population, under the auspices of its patrons and owners, the Earl of Fife and the Duke of Richmond. This parish is famous as the scene of the signal victory gained over the Canes by Malcolm II; and the district possesses the ruins of the castles of Auch-more and Balnave, of which Mr. Gordon, in his 'Statistical Account of Scotland,' says — 'When a stranger is travelling through this part of Scotland for curiosity or pleasure, they deserve his attention, and will contribute to his amusement.' The parish church is in the immediate vicinity of the village, which also contains a free church and a neat Roman catholic chapel. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in January, the first Wednesday in April, the Monday before first Tuesday in June (old style); the second Thursday in July, the third Thursday in August, and third Thursday in December (new style).

INVERAVEN.

A PARISH on the banks of the river Avon, lies chiefly in Banffshire, and a small portion in the county of Moray; about 42 miles s.w. of Banff, 72 w.n.w. of Aberdeen, 8 s.w. of Aberlour, 22 s.w. of Keith, 14 s. of Rothes, 22 S. by w. of Fochabers, and 22 s. of Elgin. Besides the Avon and the Spey, it is watered by the Livet. The surface is irregular, but cannot be described as mountainous, except the lofty region of Belriunes, which is mostly in this parish, and abounds in grouse. The district of Glen-Livet is remarkably fertile, and noted for the excellence of its whisky, for the manufacture of which there are three extensive distilleries. The sides of the river are shaded with

KEITH.

A RESPECTABLE market and post town and parish—the latter chiefly in the county of Banff, and extends into that of Moray—the town is 170 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 s.w. of Banff, 17 s.e. of Elgin, 50 n.e. of Aberdeen, 60 E. of Inverness, 8 s.e. of Fochabers, 17 s.s.w. of Portsoy, and 12 s. of Cullen; situate on the banks of the Isla, in the centre of an amphitheatre of hills. It is divided into three distinct towns, namely, Old Keith, New Keith, and Fife Keith; the latter, erected by the Earl of Fife, is separated from Old and New Keith by the Isla. The old town has declined considerably since the establishment of the new: New Keith was begun about the year 1750, by the Earl of Findlater, upon a barren tract of land, fenced off in tenements of fifteen yards by sixty; it is formed on a regular plan of three parallel streets and a square; in the latter are held the fairs and the weekly markets. There are no authentic documents to record the origin of Old Keith, but it has certainly existed upwards of six centuries. About half a mile from the town, on the banks of the Isla, is a wool-carding mill; and in the neighbourhood are corn mills—one of the latter, built upon an improved plan, and under the patronage of the Earl of Fife, occupies the site of the old mill, which was known as 'the mill of Keith.' Three branches of the respectable establishments of the 'Aberdeen Banking Company,' the 'Aberdeen Town and County Bank,' and the 'North of Scotland Banking Company,' are in operation here; and besides the usual trades of a domestic nature, there are dye-works, a distillery, a tan-yard, and two good inns. On the Cairds' Hill, denoting the 'hill of friends,' are the remains of a druidical temple, near which several tumuli have been opened, and found to contain various sepulchral remains. Tradition relates that an encounter took place in Old Keith, upwards of one hundred and fifty years ago, between Mr. Gordon, of Glengarick, and Peter Roy M'Gregor, the leader of a band of freebooters, who, after a desperate resistance, was defeated, himself taken prisoner, and his gang destroyed. A new church of the establishment was opened for public worship in 1819; it is an elegant and commodious edifice, in the neat modern Gothic style of architecture, with accommodation for a congregation of eighteen hundred, and is considered the most beautiful temple for religious service in the north of Scotland. The episcopalian, seceders, a free church community, and Roman catholics, have each a place of worship. The inhabitants have the advantage of four libraries, namely, two of evangelical subjects, a subscription library, and a juvenile collection. The market is held on Friday. Fairs at New Keith on the first Tuesdays in April, June, September and Martinmas, for cattle; at Fife-Keith on the first Tuesday in March, and the second Thursday in the months of May, July and October (all are old style.)

MACDUFF AND GAMRIE.

MACDUFF is a sea-port town in the parish of Gamrie, situated about a mile east from the town of Banff, on the opposite side of the Deveron river, and on the declivity of a hill descending towards the seashore. This town has risen, since the early part of the eighteenth century, from being little more than the hutage of a few fishermen, to a place of respectable size and trade. It is built on the property of the Earl Fife, whose fine seat lies in this neighbourhood; and to this nobleman it has been indebted for its chief improvements and prosperity; through his influence it was created a burgh of barony by George III, in 1783, when its name was altered from Doon to its present appellation; it has from that period increased rapidly in extent and consequence; contains a handsome church, a grammar-school, and a school for poor children of both sexes—the latter, called the 'Murray Institution,' from its having been founded by a Mr. Murray, of London, a canvass manufacturer, and a native of Macduff, in 1849: there is also a town house and gaol.

The church, or rather chapel of ease, occupies a conspicuous position on the eminence; and Lord Fife has ornamented his precincts with a cross, which is highly effective at a little distance. The same nobleman has munificently expended a vast sum in the erection and improvement of the harbour which is now considered one of the best on the Moray Frith; as a station of the herring fishery it is exceedingly valuable, a greater supply of that fish being obtained and shipped from this port than from any other between Fraserburgh and Cromarty. There are two branch banking establishments—the 'Aberdeen Banking Company,' and the 'North of Scotland Banking Company.' The greater proportion of the grain produced for twenty miles east of Macduff is exported hence, as are salmon, cod, and excellent granite; and the country inland is supplied with coal, bone manure and lime imported here. Several vessels trade with London and the Baltic; the number of fishing boats is very considerable, and in the curing of fish there are some respectable establishments, and many of the inhabitants obtain in this branch comfortable and even lucrative employment. The town is governed by a provost, bailies, and council; and it has a weekly market on Tuesday.

The parish of GAMRIE extends about eleven miles, by an average breadth of about two and a half. The coast is bold and precipitous, and indented with caverns. The land is partly under tillage and partly in pasture. Thriving plantations greet the eye in several quarters, and other beneficial improvements are in progress in this parish, the whole of which belongs to the Earl of Fife, and Mr. Garden, of Troup.

POST OFFICE, Alexander Smith, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive from Banff every morning, at five minutes before eight, and afternoon at a quarter before five; and are despatched thereto every morning at a quarter past six, and afternoon at twenty minutes before four.

PORTSOY AND FORDYCE.

PORTSOY is a sea-port in the parish of Fordyce; 178 miles N. of Edinburgh, 80 E. by N. of Inverness, 18 E. N. E. of Fochabers, and 8 W. by N. of Banff, situated on a tongue of land projecting into the Moray Frith, at the head of one of those little bays by which this part of the coast is in many places indented. It was erected into a burgh of barony about the sixteenth century, by the baron of Boyne, whose descendant, embracing the fortunes of the pretender, in 1715, forfeited their lands to the crown; they were subsequently granted to the Earl of Findlater and Seafield, and are still in the possession of that family. The town is small and irregularly built, but as a port it is in a thriving condition: the point of land on which it stands forms a safe harbour, which has been greatly improved; and it is now sufficiently deep to moor vessels of upwards of two hundred tons burthen. Besides the proceeds of the herring fishery, which has been actively prosecuted for some years, it enjoys a trade in the exportation of grain and stone, and the importation of coal; fish-curing, a woollen manufactory, and a distillery, are prominent branches among the general domestic business, which, combined with the income resulting from the traffic of its port, has elevated Portsoy into a position of some consequence as a commercial town. The stone raised from the quarries of this district (which has obtained the name of 'Portsoy marble') is a beautiful mixture of red, green, and white accumulations, and is wrought into tea-cups, vases, and small ornaments, but not frequently into chimney-pieces, being found too hard and brittle for that purpose. Some singular specimens of schistus, and a species of asbestos of a greenish hue, are met with in this neighbourhood; but the most remarkable mineral production is a granite, of a buff or flesh colour, which, except here and in Arabia, has not been discovered throughout the world. The export of these different natural varieties is considerable, and adds to the inflowing wealth of the district, which likewise abounds with excellent limestone. The burgh is under the jurisdiction of a baron bailie and a justice of the peace; the Earl of Seafield is superior. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church, an independent chapel, an episcopal chapel, and one for Roman Catholics.

The parish of FORDYCE is of great antiquity. The village is situated about 3 miles W. by S. from Portsoy; and owns at the present day some celebrity from its educational institutions. Smith's academy, is a handsome modern building, in which nine boys are educated and clothed. The parochial school is admirably conducted; it was in this latter establishment that Sir James Clark, Bart. physician in ordinary to her majesty, and John Forbes, Esq. physician extraordinary to H. R. H. Prince Albert, received the early part of their education. The most remarkable remnant of antiquity in the village, is a large castellated building, standing on the east side of the square, and bearing the date of 1592; it originally belonged to the Durn family, but is now the property of Lord Seafield.

BERWICKSHIRE.

THIS is the most south-easterly county of Scotland: it is bounded on the east by the North Sea, and on the west by the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk; on the north the range of Lammermoor hills separate it from the county of Haddington, and on the south it is bordered by Northumberland and Roxburghshire, having a detached portion of the county of Durham upon its south-eastern limits. Its form is an irregular oblong square, measuring from east to west nearly thirty-four miles, and from north to south about twenty; and its area comprehends four hundred and forty-two square miles, or 282,880 statute acres.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the period of the Roman invasion, Berwickshire was inhabited by tribes of British, called Olladinii; and it was subsequently overrun by bands of Saxons, who engrafted their language and manners on those of the original inhabitants. The conquests of these foreigners extended a considerable way along the shores to the east and west; and in the course of time they gave the land of which they thus possessed themselves the title of Lothian, which it still retains in the western division. The entire area of Berwickshire was comprised in this Saxon territory, which was distinguished by the name of Saxonia, superseding its previous designation, Bernicia. Until the year 1020, this district of country was included within the kingdom of Northumberland; in that year it was ceded to King Malcolm II, by Cospatrik, Earl of Northumberland, who settled in Scotland, and was created Earl of Dunbar. About the beginning of the eleventh century many Norman and Anglo-Saxon families settled in Berwickshire, as well as in other parts of Scotland, and were the founders of a number of noble houses still ranked in the peerage of the country. It appears, likewise, that the town of Berwick became a settlement of Flemish, and other foreign tradesmen; and it is recorded as a fact, that at Berwick originated those laws which were framed and applied in Scotland for the regulation of burghs and their guild associations. Being the threshold of the Scottish kingdom in entering from England, Berwickshire suffered, in the succeeding centuries, in all the wars between the two hostile nations, and was occasionally involved in jurisdictional disputes with its ecclesiastical neighbour, the Palatine Bishop of Durham; and Berwick, and its bridge across the Tweed, were in general the main objects of contention. The description of Berwick will be found under the more appropriate head of that town. From the variety of successes and disasters which Berwickshire underwent for so many centuries, and from its successive occupation by different mixed nations, the people of this part of North Britain have not that distinct Scottish character so directly recognized in places more distant from the frontier: by their language and personal appearance, especially the former, the inhabitants of Berwick and its neighbourhood are easily particularized; and in common with the Northumbrians, they speak with that remarkable burr which is found nowhere else in the kingdom. The women are famed for their beauty—the men for their gallant bearing in times of warlike strife: the Men of Merse distinguished themselves at Flodden, and other bloody fields, under the command of Lord Home; and there is a tradition that a party, led to the Holy Land by some of their feudal chiefs, obtained on its ensanguined plains the highest honours for their unconquerable intrepidity. When Charles I paid his first visit to Scotland, in 1633, Lord Home met him at Berwick with a train of six hundred Merse gentlemen, ‘gallantly arrayed’ on horseback. The present generation has seen that the yeomanry of the Merse have lost no portion of the military spirit of their ancestors.

SURFACE, SOIL, &c.—Berwickshire is divided into three districts, namely,—Merse, Lammermoor (or Lammermuir), and Lauderdale. The Merse, so called from the word march, or boundary, is the largest and most valuable district, and occasionally gives name to the whole county: it is the most compact and extensive piece of level ground in Scotland, comprising about 130,000 statute acres; in appearance it resembles a wide-spread portion of some of the English fertile counties; and being well enclosed, and enriched with trees and plantations, when viewed from any of the gentle eminences which its surface occasionally presents, it looks like a vast garden. Lammermoor, which consists of nearly 90,000 statute acres, is a highly pastoral district, with generally a wild brown aspect; and runs on the northern border of the Merse so as to effectually divide the fine vales of Edinburgh and Haddington shires from the beautiful valley of the Tweed: but for this chain of blackish obstructive hills, the prospect from Edinburgh would be carried the length of the Cheviots. The district of Lauderdale, which has received this title from the Leader Water, along whose banks it ranges, is a mixture of hill and dale, the land in the valleys being essentially arable: this portion of the county contains about 67,000 statute acres. The eminences of Berwickshire are not of such magnitude or interest as to require particular description: those of the greatest altitude above the level of the sea are—Soutra Hill, 1,716 feet; Crib Law, 1,615; Clint Hill, 1,544; Tippet-Knows, 1,323; Twin-Law, 1,260; and Dirrington-Law, 1,145.

PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &c.—Within the last forty years very great exertions have been made to improve the agricultural character of the county, and in this respect it differs nothing from the neighbouring territory of East Lothian: the country is thickly but not redundantly populated with a most intelligent, active peasantry and farming class. The exports of Berwickshire consist of great quantities of corn, coal, sheep, and eggs; and these, indeed, may be considered as the extent of its commerce. Minute investigation has failed in discovering minerals or fossils in sufficient supply to be of great and general benefit, although some coal exists in the vicinity of Berwick, and in the parishes of Mordington and Cockburnspath; and limestone is, almost consequently, found in its proximity. Marl and gypsum have likewise been raised; and freestone and whinstone, of various kinds, abound in every part of the shire. As coal is introduced from Durham by an easy land carriage, the district of the Merse does not feel the absence of that valuable fuel very severely; but in some other parts of the shire, as throughout the upper portion of the vale of Tweed, this article is dear. Berwickshire is strictly pastoral and agricultural—manufactures, as yet, have made little or no progress within its borders; what is connected with this system of industry finds its chief seat at the principal town, Berwick, where linens, sackings, sailcloths and ropes are made, flax dressed and spun, and the iron trade exists to a considerable degree of importance; the curing of herrings, in this quarter, is a somewhat extensive occupation; and it is from hence that large shipments of corn and coal are made.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of this county flow in general either to the south or north-east. The Tweed, which is an imposing stream, and the most lovely of Scottish rivers, from its sparkling clearness and its soft sylvan banks, receives all the currents that are poured down from the northern eminences: it is not susceptible of navigation; but it is of great value from its salmon fisheries, which are under a strict system of water police. The Leader, the Eden, and the united streams of the Blackadder and the Whiteadder course into the Tweed. The Eye is the only other river; it falls into the sea at Eyemouth. The Eden, which runs southward from Lammermoor, has a remarkable fall, near the house of Newton Don, of above forty feet, exhibiting a fine appearance when there is a flood. It is a peculiarity of the Blackadder, that no salmon can live in it—if any happen to enter, they are said to die in a few days; though they are caught plentifully in the Whiteadder, which also abounds with trout and whiting; these latter attain a larger size than the trout; their flesh is red, and in flavour bears a partial affinity to that of salmon. The principal RAILWAY in this county is the 'North British': this line enters at Berwick and goes to Cockburnspath, Dunbar, Haddington, &c. to Edinburgh. From the North British there is the 'Dunse and Riston' branch, communicating with 'Chirnside'; and the 'Edinburgh' branch, to Melrose and Hawick, passes about five miles to the west of Lauder. The northern extremity of the 'York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway' is at Berwick; and here the magnificent Tweed viaduct connects that line with the North British, and forms, with other railways, an uninterrupted communication from London to Aberdeen.—(See the town of Berwick for a more detailed account of the viaduct.)

DIVISION AND REPRESENTATION.—Berwickshire comprehends (exclusive of Berwick town) thirty-three parishes, and two parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, Lauder. The only contributory burgh (or that which, in conjunction with others, is represented in the senate), in this county, is Lauder; the others, representatively connected with it, are Haddington, Dunbar, and North Berwick, in Haddingtonshire—and Jedburgh, in Roxburghshire. Berwick-upon-Tweed is a royal burgh, and sends two members; but is not classed as an integral portion of the county; which sends one for the shire at large.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, TWEEDMOUTH, SPITTAL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED (so denominated to distinguish it from North Berwick, in East Lothian, and several Berwicks in England), is a corporate and parliamentary borough and seaport, 334 miles N. by W. from London, 64 N. by W. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 49 N. from Morpeth; from the city of Edinburgh it is distant S. E. 59 miles, and from Glasgow E. by S. 103. It is a town of considerable importance, of Saxon or Tonic origin. The etymology of its name is as doubtful as the period of its first establishment is obscure. Maitland, the historian of Edinburgh, entered into a dissertation to prove that the title was transferred by the Saxon founders from a town of note, of the same name, in their own country—in the like manner as European emigrants designate cities and towns on the continent of America: others, and among the rest, Camden, allege that the word Berwick is deduced from Berwicca, signifying 'a village belonging to a manor;' while a third party, with more feasibility, derive it from bar and wick, 'a castle on the bend of a river.' But, in whatever manner, or from whom, Berwick received its appellation, it was fortified and defended by a garrison at a very remote period of British history; it became the chief town of the district, and was the centre, on various occasions, of many important transactions. It stands on the north side of the river Tweed, about half a mile from the spot where that stream empties itself into Berwick bay. Prior to the year 1551 it was a Scots town; but it was then erected into a free burgh or distinct liberty, in some measure independent of either kingdom—having a small district attached to it called 'Berwick bounds,' stretching about three miles north, and the like distance up the Tweed. It may be added that it is described as a large and populous town so early as the reign of David I, of Scotland—is mentioned as a place of redoubtable strength in the time of Osbert, one of the last kings of Northumberland—and is assumed to be the point where the Danes landed, in one of their excursions under Hubba, in the year 867. It continued in the possession of the Saxons for some ages, and subsequently was held by the Danes, until the Scottish king Gregory (contemporary with Alfred the Great) took it by assault. About the year 1098 Berwick was annexed to the See of Durham, by Edgar; but the gift was soon after resumed, in consequence of the ingratitude of Ralph Flaubert, who had been consecrated bishop of that see. William I. of Scotland, who, in 1174, had joined Henry's three sons in rebellion, was taken prisoner near Alnwick, and conducted in chains before Henry, who obliged him to pay homage for the whole of Scotland; and, as a security, he was forced to deliver up the fort of Berwick, together with all the principal forts of Scotland. In 1291 the states of England and Scotland, with Edward I. assembled at Berwick, to determine the claims of Robert Bruce and John Balliol to the Scottish crown, when, after numerous conferences, on the 17th of November in the following year, the king appointed John Balliol successor to the crown. The town is surrounded by regular fortifications, and was formerly the principal one of the kingdom of Merse: it stands on a gentle declivity, at a short distance from the sea; its gates and walls are yet standing, but the cannon have for some time been removed to Leith; a ditch aided its defence on the north-east, and the river served for a moat on the south side, the ancient castle, of which there are only a few remains, must have been of great strength, and is now merely an attractive object to the antiquary.

Berwick is a well-built town, and is connected with the south bank of the Tweed by a firmly constructed bridge of hewn stone, of fifteen spacious and elegant arches; the entire length of the bridge is 1,164 feet, and its width seventeen feet; at each of the pillars, which are fourteen in number, there is an outlet to both sides, for the greater safety of foot passengers when carriages, &c. approach in opposite directions; it was commenced in the reign of Elizabeth, but not completed until that of Charles I. and in those days was computed to have cost £15,000: the sixth pillar, from the Berwick side, separates that town from the county palatine of Durham. About a quarter of a mile higher up the river is the railway viaduct, opened by her Majesty and Prince Albert on the 29th of August, 1850. This magnificent structure spans the broad valley of the Tweed at Berwick, and completes an important link in the chain of railway communication between London and Edinburgh by the east coast. It forms the northern extremity of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway; and in magnitude of construction and grandeur of design, is, perhaps, one of the most remarkable architectural achievements of modern times. The foundation stone of this noble structure was laid on the 15th of May, 1847 without any public ceremony. The viaduct consists of twenty-eight circular arches, each of sixty-one feet six inches span, springing from lofty piers eight feet six inches broad at the narrowest point. One-half of the arches span the river—here a broad and beautiful stream—and the remainder are built on the neighbouring land, south of the Tweed. The total length of the bridge is 2,160 feet, and its greatest height, from the bed of the river, one hundred and twenty-six feet six inches, including the parapets. Its breadth between the parapets is twenty-four feet, allowing a double line of railway to be laid. The viaduct is built entirely of stone, with the exception of the inner part of the arches, which is brick, laid in cement. There are about one million and a quarter cubic feet of masonry in the structure; and two million and a half of bricks have been placed in the arches. The greatest depth of the water, at high tide, is twenty-three feet.

The design of the bridge is elegant: and the parapets are adorned on the outside by miniature corbelled arches. One half of the viaduct—that which spans the river—is in a straight line; and the other half curves to the east, on a radius of half a mile towards the south side. The road way has an incline of one in two hundred, rising towards Berwick. The piers of the bridge which are protected by handsome cutwaters, are carved up perpendicularly, and are narrowed near the spring of the arch, by means of offsets. The parapets and springs of the arches are of polished stone, but the rest of the masonry is only rough hewn. The appearance of the arches is extremely graceful.

aduct in the kingdom. Some similar structures may be longer, but less in height; and others may be higher; but not of such length. The last arch of this magnificent bridge was keyed on the 26th of March, 1850, by the wife of the resident engineer.

The bridge is secured at each end by substantial abutments; and in the centre there is another abutment, less in size than the other, dividing the arches into two sides. When one-half of the arches had been erected, it was considered desirable, for the accommodation of the traffic, to erect a temporary bridge across the river, without waiting the completion of the stone viaduct, so as to avoid the uncertainty of the river operations. This temporary timber viaduct was about 1,200 feet in length, and of the same height as the permanent bridge, which it joined at the fourteenth arch. Workmen are now engaged in the removal of this singular structure. The quantity of timber used in the construction of the stone and timber bridges was not less than 300,000 cubic feet. The large embankment at the south end of the bridge, five-eighths of a mile in length, and in some places sixty feet high, completes the junction of the Tweedmouth with the Berwick station, making a total distance of one mile. It contains upwards of 700,000 yards of earthwork. The contractor at one time employed two thousand men in the various departments of his contract. The entire cost of the viaduct, amounting to about £200,000, has been borne by the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company.

Since the passing of the Municipal Reform Act, a very material alteration has taken place in the government of this borough. The new corporation consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, and a recorder, with the usual assistant officers, styled the 'Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses of the Borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed.' A gaol delivery is held quarterly, if necessary, for the trial of capital offences; general quarter sessions are held four times a year, and Berwick is included in the circuit of county court towns under the acts of 1846-50. The mayor and bailiffs are lords of the manor, and hold courts leet and baron twice in the year. The borough returns two members to parliament; the present ones are John Campbell Renton, Esq. Mordington House, and Matthew Forster, Esq. Belrive, Hampstead, Middlesex. The new boundary act defines the limits of the borough to comprise the parish of Berwick, and the respective townships of Tweedmouth and Spittal; the same act appoints Berwick one of the polling stations for taking votes at the election of representatives for North Northumberland.

The principal branches of maritime trade comprise the exportation of grain, and of salmon caught in the Tweed, which are sent to the London market; the fishing season commences on the 15th February, and terminates on the 15th October; the more generally chosen part of the river for this pursuit is from the mouth of the Norham stream, a distance of seven miles. The herring fishery is also a branch of great importance, and is prosecuted with vigour. Coal is obtained in the district of a good quality, and is exported to some extent. The country is well adapted to the purposes of agriculture, and some fine views may be contemplated in the vicinity. The public erections, besides those appropriated to divine worship, are the town hall, the barracks, the new gaol, the fine bridge, the noble viaduct, the ramparts, and a beautiful and extensive pier—the two latter form delightful walks. The new railway station may likewise be here mentioned; it stands on part of the site of the old castle, and commands a beautiful view of the valley of the Tweed. Two newspapers are published in Berwick weekly—their titles, &c. appear in the Directory.

There is but one church here under the establishment; it is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and is a flat-roofed Gothic edifice: the building was begun in 1648, and finished in 1652; from being destitute of either tower or spire, it has a rather singular appearance, but these were considered unnecessary ornaments in the days of Cromwell. The living of Berwick is a vicarage, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. Joseph Barnes. The other places of worship are those of the Church of Scotland, United Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. There are many valuable schools, six of which were founded by the corporation, for the education of burges' children of both sexes; also a Latin grammar school, in connexion with the corporation; a charity school, supported by various bequests; a school of industry, a parochial one for the children of the workhouse, and others upon the national plan. An excellent dispensary for the relief of the poor, a public library, and a number of benevolent institutions, are well supported. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and there is one for the sale of fat cattle on the first Saturday in every month. Fairs the last Friday in May, for horses and cattle; and statutes or 'hirings' for servants on the first Saturdays in March, May, August, and November.

TWEEDMOUTH is a parochial chapelry (now forming a part of the borough of Berwick), in Islandshire, and connected with the county of Durham. It is situated at the south end of the bridge, about a quarter of a mile from Berwick, and consists of several streets, irregularly built, but the general appearance of the place has been much improved of late years. The Newcastle and Berwick Railway station is situated in the eastern part of the town. The inhabitants, as in Berwick, are extensively engaged in the salmon fishery; and its other branches of trade, exports and imports, are of the like nature with that town, with the addition of an extensive iron foundry, belonging to the Messrs. Robertson. The places of worship are a free church, a chapel of ease, and a large and commodious one in connexion with the Church of Scotland.

SPITTAL is a populous village, in the parish of Tweedmouth, situated at the mouth of the river, about three quarters of a mile from Berwick, and also forming a part of the parliamentary borough. It is chiefly inhabited by fishermen and colliers. Many excellent houses for the accommodation of visitors, have of late years been built, and it is much resorted to in summer as a bathing place. It has also a valuable mineral spa, the waters of which contain fixed air, iron, and a portion of sulphuric acid. Here is a large chapel for United Presbyterians. Herring curing is carried on in his village to a great extent.

CHIRNSIDE.

CHIRNSIDE is a parish lying in the eastern part of the Merse, on the northern side of the Whiteadder, and extending four miles in length by about three in breadth. The village is 50 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 13½ N. N. E. from Greenlaw, 9 N. W. from Berwick, and 6 N. from Dunse. It consists of two streets, the buildings of which are for the most part detached and straggling, and extend nearly a mile in length. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, an united presbyterian chapel and a Cameronian meeting-house. From the hill on which the village is situated a fine view of many miles of fertile and well-cultivated country, interspersed with many gentlemen's seats is obtained, the view to the south being bounded by the Cheviot hills. The estate of Ninewells, the family seat of the Humes, is in this neighbourhood; and David Hume, the celebrated historian, though born in Edinburgh, was, from his infancy, brought up in this parish, which may therefore proudly claim him as its own. Some vestiges of ancient encampments are discernible in this district. Less than a mile to the west of the village is the pretty rural hamlet of CHIRNSIDE-BRIDGE, where a good bridge crosses the Whiteadder; and over which also the railway is carried by means of another bridge, a handsome structure of stone. Upon the banks of the river a species of gypsum is found, and in other parts of the district abundance of marl is obtained.

(DUNSE AND RESTON BRANCH.)
Station, about one mile from the Town

COCKBURNSPATH.

IS a parish on the sea-coast—the village being 3½ miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. from Greenlaw, 14 N. from Dunse, 8 S.E. from Dunbar, and 21 N.W. from Berwick, situate on the road between the two last named towns and on the line of the North British Railway. The shore is precipitous, presenting a line of cliffs about one hundred feet above the level of the sea; behind the cliffs, the ground rises gently toward the hills, having many deep glens, or ravines, whose sides are sometimes sloping and covered with verdure, but the general appearance is rocky, with overhanging woods. Over one of these ravines, cut by the torrentous course of the Pease-burn, is thrown 'the Peaths,' or Pease-bridge, planned and erected by Mr. Henderson, in 1786; it is one hundred and twenty-three feet from the bottom of the Pease-burn, which flows beneath—three hundred feet in length, and fifteen in width; it is looked upon that it is a masterpiece of architecture, is understood to be the highest bridge in the world, and is consequently an object of peculiar attraction to the curious visiting these parts. Nearly a quarter of a mile above the bridge are the remains of an ancient castle, distinguished by no other appellation than that of the 'old tower.' As this parish is near the boundary of the two kingdoms, many traces of camps are visible on the rising grounds, and indelible proofs of military operations of former days arrest the eye in the passes. The ruins of the church of Auld Cambus, formerly united this parish, are still standing. A church of the establishment, and a secession chapel, are the present places of worship.

POST, Letters from LONDON and the SOUTH, &c., arrive (by rail) every morning at half-past three, and are despatched at twenty minutes before twelve, noon; and at seven in the evening.

Letters from EDINBURGH and the NORTH arrive, every day at ten minutes past twelve noon, and twenty minutes past seven in the evening; and are despatched at three in the morning, and twenty-seven minutes past twelve noon.

COLDINGHAM.

COLDINGHAM is a parish lying on the coast of the German ocean—the village, a burgh of barony, is 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 21 N.N.E. of Greenlaw, 17 S.E. of Dunbar, 13 N.N.E. of Duns, 11 N.N.W. of Berwick, and 4 from Ayton station, on the North British Railway. It is charmingly seated upon a small eminence in the centre of a fine valley, at a short distance from the sea, and near to St. Abb's Head, a noted point of land projecting into the sea. Its antiquity is unquestionably great, for it is distinctly pointed out in Ptolemy's map of Britain under the Roman sway, and in this respect surpasses Berwick and other more considerable towns, whose existence is not authenticated for some ages posterior. About a mile west from St. Abb's is Coldingham Loch, of a triangular figure, and estimated at a mile in circumference. The village consists of two or three humble streets, with a cross in the centre. On its south side are the ruins of the once magnificent and well-endowed priory of Coldingham, rebuilt by King Edgar, who personally assisted at its consecration: all that now remains of it is the east gable and north side (which form part of the modern parish kirk), with a few straggling fragments, including a small Saxon arch, part of the palace said to have been erected here by the royal founder of the priory. At one time this religious house stood at the head of such establishments in Scotland, and was famed far and wide for its wealth and importance. When the church of the priory was destroyed, its fine-toned bell, according to tradition, was carried off to Lincoln. Fast Castle, in this neighbourhood, is supposed to be the place described as 'Wolf's Craig,' in the novel of 'The Bride of Lammermoor.' A church belonging to the national establishment, and a chapel of the united presbyterian body, are the places of worship.

COLDSTREAM.

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COLDSTREAM is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of that name; 47 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.S.W. from Berwick, 10 S.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. from Duns, and 9 N.E. from Kelso, situated on the north bank of the Tweed, and formerly derived importance from a ford on that river: by this passage Edward I. entered Scotland, with his forces, in 1296; and many other English and Scottish armies, before the union of the crowns, made their way by this facility to ravage the country of their respective enemies: it was last used by a Scottish army as an entrance into England in 1640, when the covenanters found it necessary to have recourse to that extreme measure against Charles I. The Tweed is crossed, at this place, by a strong bridge of red freestone, consisting of five arches, which forms a main link of communication between the two nominal divisions of the island: it is placed at the distance of a furlong from the east end of the town; and from this spot a very delightful view, up and down the woody banks of the river, presents itself. This neighbourhood is the scene of Sir Walter Scott's poem of Marmion, a tale of Flodden. The town is irregularly built—quite Scottish in its appearance, notwithstanding its proximity to England, while its border situation has rendered it eligible to participate with Gretna-green in the clandestine matrimonial trade. During the winter season Coldstream is much resorted to by nobility and gentry for fox-hunting; the packs of Lord Elcho, the Berwickshire subscription, and the Duke of Buccleugh's meeting regularly in the neighbourhood.

The town is governed by a baron baillie and commissioners of police for the burgh. Justice of peace small debts courts are held monthly, and sheriff's courts six times a year. The trade here is not extensive, and manufactures are not seated in this locality. Two proprietary banking establishments have branches here; there are several respectable fire and life insurance agencies, and some good inns—amongst the latter, the 'Black Bull', the 'Commercial Hotel', and the 'Newcastle Arms Hotel', are excellent houses, and as such well supported. The places of worship are an established church, a free church, and a meeting-house for united presbyterians. At the east end of the town has been erected by the friends of Charles Marjoribanks, Esq., M. P. for Berwickshire, a handsome memorial to record the successful result of the contested election for this county in 1832. General Monk resided at Coldstream at the critical period when he awaited a favourable opportunity to advance into England, make a decisive impression by the presence of his army, and at once effect the restoration. During the winter of 1659-60 he raised here a regiment, which was therefore, and has ever since been denominated the 'Coldstream guards.' Previous to the Reformation this place could boast of a rich priory of Cistercian nuns, but of the building not even a fragment or vestige is now to be discovered. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and there is one for cattle on the last Thursday of every month.

The village of ECCLES is nearly six miles from Coldstream, in a highly cultivated parish of that name; the latter extending nearly eight miles in length by six in breadth, lying to the west of Coldstream, and bordering the river Tweed. The surface of the country is in general level, the soil rich, and the grounds are well inclosed. There was once a nunnery of great magnitude and repute in the parish; this religious edifice, however, has shared the fate of the one that existed at Coldstream. The farm of 'Deadrigs,' in this district, was formerly the scene of a desperate battle; and a stone, which rises nine feet above the surface of the ground, is said to mark the grave of one of the Percies who fell in the contest. BIRGHAM and LEITHOLM, two small villages in this parish, is where the principal retail business of it is carried on.

CORNHILL is a chapelry and village in the parish of Northam otherwise Northamshire, a detached part of the county of Durham, one mile and a half from Coldstream; situated on a branch of the York, Newcastle and Berwick railway, for which line there is a station in the village. The Tweed is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge of six arches built in 1763. The church (or chapel) of Saint Helen is a neat structure in the early English style: the living is a perpetual curacy, to which the dean and chapter of Durham present. From the parsonage a very fine view is obtained of Flodden field and the beautiful Tweed: near to the parsonage house is the parochial school, a neat building.

CRANSHAWS, ABBEY SAINT BATHANS, BUNKLE

WITH PRESTON AND LONGFORMACUS.

CRANSHAWS is a small, thinly populated parish, lying amongst the Lammermoor hills, and intersected by the parish of Longformacus; it is about 30 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 S. E. from Haddington, and about 10 N. W. from Dunse. The old castle of Cranshaws is an ancient edifice of great strength, and still entire; it is the residence of Lord Aberdour, the proprietor, for some months during the shooting season. The remains of many encampments shew, what both traditionary and historical records testify, that this part of the country has been the scene of much bloodshed and strife.

The parish of ABBAY SAINT BATHANS, is seven miles from Dunse, also situated in the midst of the Lammermoor hills. The soil is light and dry, and on the banks of the Whiteadder fertile and well cultivated; but the hilly district is barren, and covered with heath. The remains of an ancient abbey of Bernardines, founded in 1170, and dedicated to Saint Bathans, by one of the Countesses of March, form the only object of interest or curiosity in the parish.

BUNKLE (or Bunkle) and PRESTON is a united parish, forming a square of nearly six miles. The soil on the high lands, towards the Lammermoor hills, was at one time thin, dry, and poor; but, by the application of lime and marl, it has been much improved. The rest of the parish, particularly on the banks of the Whiteadder, is a fertile loam, and well cultivated. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the lands in the parish of Bonkill (then so called), were in the possession of a family of the same name: in the wars of the Bruce, Sir Alexander de Bonkill is frequently noticed; one of his female descendants marrying Sir John Stewart, had a son, who was created Earl of Angus in 1329; this title, in 1377, merged in the family of Douglas—and they, in addition to the title of Earls of Angus, are sometimes called Lords of Bonkill.

LONGFORMACUS parish, likewise in the Lammermoor district, is hilly and for the most part pastoral, but the low grounds are well cultivated; it is about twelve miles in length by six in breadth. The village, which is about seven miles from Dunse, has been improved lately by the erection of several neat cottages, a school, and residence for the master. An established church and one for a free congregation are the places of worship. Two strikingly fine conical hills called the 'Darrington Laws,' rise in this parish, and form a conspicuous object in the distance.

To Dunse, Charles Scott, from his house, Cranshaws, Tuesday

DUNSE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDROM, ALLANTON, GAVINTON IN LANGTON
AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNSE is a burgh of barony, and the largest town in the shire (Berwick not being taken in as strictly belonging to the county); it is 44 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 W. from Berwick, 11 from Ayton, S. N. E. from Greenlaw; and the Dunse branch of the North British Railway has a station about half a mile on the east side of the town. It lies nearly in the centre of the county, on a fine plain, under the southern skirts of Dunse-Law, upon which beautiful hill, before the town was burned down, it formerly stood. Its present position, at the head of a plain twenty-five miles long, encompassed on three sides by the Lammermoor ridge, the river Whiteadder running by it, is both beautiful and grand. Dunse is a place of high antiquity, but from its situation near the border, it was frequently destroyed by the English, before the succession of James to the throne of Elizabeth, on one of those occasions the town records were burned, so that no authentic account of its origin or early history has been transmitted to later ages. The present town is generally well built, the streets are lighted with gas, and contain many well-furnished and handsome shops—amongst the latter the shop and premises belonging to Mr. Turnbull, cloth merchant and wholesale draper, may be noticed as elegant, and rivaling even many metropolitan establishments. There are three branch banking-houses, and two superior inns—the 'Black Bull,' in the street of the same name, is a capital house, either for families or commercial gentlemen. The other principal business may be comprised in the breweries, several corn mills, a rope walk, and a good grain trade.

The town is governed by a baillie, appointed by Mr. Hay, the superior; the feuars manage by a council of nine the property vested in them; and the police commissioners superintend the business of that department, and some other matters connected with the burgh. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, and a sheriff's court six times in the year, at both of which debt claims of limited amount are adjudicated. The town hall, a fine Gothic building, standing in the centre of the market-place, was originally founded by the Earl of Moray, and the present edifice erected in 1816 by the feuars assisted by subscriptions. A new goal was built a short time since on the north side of the town, and contiguous to it is an ordnance store for the Berwickshire militia.

The places of worship are the parish church, a free church, and three united presbyterian churches, parochial and Sunday schools, a subscription library and reading room, a masonic lodge, and some charitable societies are among the institutions maintained in Dunse. The learned and celebrated metaphysician and theologian, Joannes Duns Scotus, was born here in 1274, and died at Cologne in 1308. The Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the 'Fourfold State,' and other works—Abraham Robertson, LL.D., professor of astronomy at Oxford—and Thomas M'Crie, D.D., in Edinburgh, were likewise born here. Dunse Castle, a fine modern mansion, in the castellated style, stands about half a mile to the north of the town. The ancient edifice was the strong hold of Randolph, Earl of Moray, the nephew and co-patriot of Bruce; it is now the seat of William Hay, Esq.: the interior decorations of the house, and the paintings with which it is embellished, render it one of the finest residences in this district of Scotland. The suburbs of Dunse are pleasant, and adorned with several elegant villas. The weekly market, a good one for grain in bulk, is held on Tuesday. Fairs on the first Thursday in June, the 26th of August, and 17th of November, or Tuesday after, for cattle and horses. There are also fairs for sheep on the fourth Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in May, the second Wednesday in July, and the fourth Wednesday in September.

EDROM is a parish and village—the latter about three miles and a half east from Dunse; situated near the road leading from that town to Chirnside, and on the banks of the Whiteadder, on which, at Chirnside-bridge, there is a very extensive paper mill worked by Messrs. Trotter & Son; also several neat buildings erected by the firm for their workpeople. The parish of Edrom, which is ten miles in length by six in breadth, is watered by the Blackadder and Whiteadder streams; Dunse spa, once celebrated for its mineral properties, is on the borders of this parish. Much of the soil is fertile, and produces excellent corn; but towards the hills it is moorish and shallow. At ALLANTON, a delightful little rural village in this parish, the two rivers above-mentioned unite; and here a neat stone bridge crosses the mingled streams. Blackadder House, the seat of Sir George Houston Boswall is in this parish.

GAVINTON is a village in the parish of Langton, situated two miles from Dunse, and half a mile south of the site of the old village of Langton, which has entirely disappeared. The present village, which is neat and regular in its form, obtained its name from Mr. Gavin, the late proprietor of the estate of Langton, which includes nearly the whole parish: it now belongs to the Marquess of Breadalbane, a descendant of Mr. Gavin. Formerly the proprietor of Langton occupied a castle in Langton wood; but for the last century the family resided at the mansion here, Langton House, now occupied by the Hon. Hannah Charlotte Tharpe, cousin to the nobleman above-named. In a small chapel in Langton wood, between the years 1670 and 1689, the presbyterians used to assemble for worship; and it was in this humble and secluded temple that Veitch, and some other eminent divines, occasionally preached. After the latter period it was used for a short time by the episcopallians, after which it fell to decay, and not a trace of the building now remains. There are now a neat church of the establishment, a free church, and a parochial school in the village.

EARLSTOUN, LEGERWOOD, MERTOUN, NENTHORN, AND STITCHEL WITH HUME.

EARLSTOUN (anciently Ercildoun) is a parish and village—the latter 31 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 11 W. by N. from Kelso, 18 S.W. from Dunse, 15 N. from Jedburgh, 10 S.W. from Greenlaw, 8½ N.E. from Galashiels, and 7 S. from Lauder. The situation of this village is at once rare and beautiful, being seated in a rich valley encompassed by hills of a moderate height, which are interspersed by thriving plantations, and in a state of high cultivation; the Leader river flows on the west of the parish, and the Eden on the east. At one time the trade of the village and its neighbourhood was confined to weaving certain fabrics for the Glasgow houses; now there are several respectable establishments employing a number of hands—the principal are Messrs. Whale and Co. in the manufacture of furniture stripes, gingham, shawls, tweeds, &c.; Messrs. Wilson and Sons, in woollens and tweeds; and Mr. Fairbairn, in gingham. Part of the tower which was the residence of Sir Thomas Learmont (commonly called 'the Rhymer'), who flourished in the thirteenth century, is still standing; a stone in the wall of the church bears this inscription, in ancient characters—'Auld Rhymer's race lies in this place.' The seat of Coldingknows stands on the side of a hill; it is an ancient building, and the locality is famous in Scottish song. When the Highland army, under Prince Charles, passed through this part of the country on their way to Kelso, a claymore was left at Fans, which was in the possession of Mr. Riddell, surgeon, of this place, for some considerable time, but has since passed into other hands. There are two fairs, on the 29th of June and the third Thursday in October, for cattle.

LEGERWOOD parish extends three miles in length by two and a half broad. Its elevated surface is well cultivated, being occupied by opulent and practically skilful farmers; and is adapted, in general, both for crops and pasture. The village of Legerwood is three miles from Earlston, situate on a cross road off the thoroughfare through Lauderdale. Boonhill, in this parish, was a signal station during the late war.

MERTOUN parish stretches about six miles along the north bank of the Tweed, with a breadth of nearly three miles; the whole is enclosed, and in a fine state of cultivation. The parish church stands near the Tweed, about five miles from Earlston.

NENTHORN parish abuts on Roxburghshire, and is four miles in length and nearly as much in breadth.

POST OFFICE, EARLSTOUN, John Spence, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from MELROSE) every afternoon, at half-past one, and evening at twenty-five minutes past six; and are despatched there to at ten minutes past ten in the morning, and twenty minutes past three in the afternoon.

The soil throughout is generally good, and its skilful culture is apparent.

STITCHEL AND HUME are united parishes—the former in Roxburghshire, the latter in Berwickshire. The remains of Hume castle, noted during the contentions on the borders, stand in this parish; they command an extensive prospect over almost the whole of the Merse and Roxburghshire. The village of Stitchel is situated about four miles north from the town of Kelso; Hume village stands three miles south from Greenlaw, and the like distance north from Stitchel. There is nothing peculiarly attractive in this district as respects objects of curiosity, but there are some fine mansions with their pleasure grounds and plantations.

EYEMOUTH, AYTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EYEMOUTH is an ancient little seaport and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 50 miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. E. from Dunbar, 20 N. from Coldstream, 13½ N. E. from Dunse, 8 N. from Berwick, and three from Ayton station on the North British railway. It lies at the mouth of the Eye, where that river discharges its waters into the North Sea, from which circumstance the town and parish takes its name. The port is a very ancient one, being known as such so early as the reign of Alexander II, when it was resorted to by the monks of that age, as a commodious harbour for importing supplies for their establishment, and for shipping wool, hides, &c. in which they trafficked. Shipping can work into and out of the bay at all times of the tide, or lie at anchor in the haven, secure from all winds except the north and north-east, or when the passage cannot be effected up the Frith of Forth; and the port is much frequented by wind-bound vessels. The herring fishery is a source of profitable employment to many of the inhabitants. Eyemouth was a great depot for smugglers; it is affirmed that at one time almost every house had secret cellars connected with it, wherein those engaged in the illicit trade concealed the goods and liquors landed here from the luggers, which frequented the harbour and neighbouring shores. The vigilance and energy of the preventive service, together with the judicious alteration of the duties, have, however, long destroyed this illegitimate mode of acquiring wealth, and turned the trade of the town into more honourable and less hazardous channels. On a small promontory, which stretches out into the sea, there are the remains of a regular fortification, supposed to have been constructed by a French officer entrusted with the command of the Queen Regent's troops.

A church of the establishment, a free church, and chapels for primitive methodists and united presbyterians, are the places of worship. The St. Abb's Lodge of Master Masons, and the Land of Cakes Royal Arch Chapter, hold their meetings here, in a neat lodge-room, formed in 1757; it was in this room that Burns the poet was initiated in masonry. Fairs are held on the first Thursdays of June and October.

AYTON is a parish and village—the latter is two miles and a half from Eyemouth, and eight N. W. from Berwick; occupying a delightful situation on the left bank of the Eye, on the main line of railway between Edinburgh and the south. The parish describes an area of about four miles each way, including about two miles of sea coast, which is here bold and rocky; more inland the soil is rich, producing all kinds of grain. Several vestiges of encampments are discernible through the parish, and urns, with pieces of broken armour, have been occasionally brought to the surface by the plough. In the village is a church of the establishment and two presbyterian chapels. A fair is held on the 12th of October.

FOULDEN AND MORDINGTON.

FOULDEN is a parish and village—the latter one of the prettiest little places in the county, is a burgh of barony; 52 miles E. by S. of Edinburgh, 10 E. of Dunse, and 5 N. W. of Berwick; pleasantly situated on the north side of the Whiteadder river, which is here confined between steep banks. Within the last two years the dwellings have been nearly all rebuilt, in a neat and picturesque style. John Wilkie, Esq., is superior of the burgh. The parish, which lies in the eastern part of the Merse district, is two miles and a half in length by two in breadth; bounded by Ayton on the north, and Hutton on the south.

The parish of MORDINGTON lies in the south eastern corner of the county, and the kirk is about one mile from Foulden. It was in the mansion-house of Mordington that Cromwell, when he passed the Tweed for the first time, established his quarters. It has been erroneously asserted that the Princess Margaret was married to James IV. in Lamberton church (now in ruins), in this parish. At the boundary of the parish with the liberties of Berwick is the toll-bar and hamlet of LAMERTON: and at this place (within the Scottish border), marriages are solemnized in the same summary manner, and on precisely the same principle, as they are at better known Gretna. The remains of a Danish camp—Edrington cafile, situate at the top of a steep rock—and ‘the Witches’ Know,’ where, little more than a century ago, several unfortunate women were burnt for witchcraft—are objects not unworthy the notice of the traveller journeying through this quarter of the county. Ironstone some years ago was discovered within the parish, and subsequently coal has been got on the estate of John Campbell Renton, Esq., M. P., of Mordington House.

GREENLAW AND GORDON.

GREENLAW is a burgh of barony, and considered (although Dunse is considerably larger) the county town of Berwickshire, it is 37 miles s. e. from Edinburgh, 20 w. from Berwick, 12 e. from Lauder, 7½ s. w. from Dunse, and 10 n. w. from Coldstream. It is situated in a valley on the north bank of the Blackadder, which stream is crossed by two bridges, and consists of one long street, with a square market place receding from the south side. After Berwick was taken by the English, the sheriff and county courts were transferred, first to Old Greenlaw (which was one mile to the south, but of which no vestiges remain) and subsequently to the present town, where they have been held ever since, except for a short time during the turbulent reign of Charles I, when they held their sittings at Dunse. Being seated near the centre of the shire, Greenlaw was by royal charter in 1596, and by act of parliament in 1696, ordained the head burgh of the county, and is governed by a baron baillie. A sheriff court and one for the recovery of small debts are held monthly; the justices' court sits at Dunse. The old gaol and courthouse, which stood in the churchyard, have been superseded by the present strong and handsome prison and elegant county buildings, erected in 1831, at the sole expense of, and presented to the shire by, the late Sir W. P. H. Campbell.

The parish of Greenlaw lies in the centre of the

Merse, extending seven or eight miles in length, from north to south, and on an average about two miles in breadth. The surface of the land is for the most part level, rising occasionally into slight detached eminences. Sheep-walks, moor, and soil adapted to turnips, are the main characteristics of the land. Besides the established church there are places of worship for free and for united presbyterian congregations. A cattle fair is held on the 22nd of May, and another on the last Thursday in October.

GORDON village is five miles from Greenlaw, on the road from Edinburgh to Kelso. The river Eden intersects the parish, which extends seven miles in length by from two to four in breadth. At Castles, where some ruins still remain, resided, as is believed, the ancestors of the present Duke of Gordon; and Huntly and Huntleywood, the names of two farms in the parish, claim the honour of giving the title of Marquess of Huntly to his Grace's eldest son. Greenknow tower, a venerable structure (now the property of George Fairholm, Esq.) was frequently had recourse to as a place of refuge by the inhabitants, who fled thither when suddenly surprised by the incursions of the English, prior to the union between the two kingdoms. An established church and a free church are the places of worship.

HUTTON AND PAXTON

ARE two small, pleasant and rural villages in the parish of Hutton, and district of Neise, lying to the west of Berwick bounds, from which the parish is divided by the river Whiteadder. Hutton is situated about seven miles from Berwick, in the northern part of the parish; and Paxton 5 miles distant, is in the eastern quarter. The latter village is understood to have formed the locality of the song entitled 'Robin Adair,' The Tweed, which bounds Hutton parish on the south, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, called the Union-bridge, from a point near Paxton to a place a little below Horncliff, a village in the county of Durham; it forms the only connexion of the two sides of the river between Coldstream and Berwick, from which last-named town it is frequently visited by parties of pleasure; it admits two carriages abreast, and has been of great service in facilitating the introduction of coal and lime into Berwickshire. At Hutton a handsome new church was opened for divine service, in April 1835. The late Rev. P. Redpath, the erudite translator of Boethius, was minister of this parish. The present minister is the Rev. John Edgar.

LAUDER,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CHANNELKIRK, UGSTON, AND THIRLSTAIN.

LAUDER is an ancient royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish, as it is of the district of Lauderdale; 25 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 35 W. of Berwick, 21 N. of Jedburgh, 22 S.W. of Coldstream, 20 S.W. of Dunse, 17 N.W. of Kelso, 12 W. of Greenlaw, 7 N. of Earlston, and about 5 miles from the Stow station, on the line of the North British railway. It is situated in the vale of the Leader, on the main road from Edinburgh to Kelso, and consists principally of a line of houses on each side of the thoroughfare, with an additional street about the centre, at the west end of which is the town-house. The buildings are plain, and of irregular construction; and the town was destitute of any edifice that could lay claim to particular notice, until of late years. Now there are good school premises, neat and substantial houses, an excellent inn (the 'Black Bull'), in the centre of the town, two banks, and a few tasteful villas in the neighbourhood. The trade is chiefly of a local and domestic nature, and manufactures have not as yet imparted their benefits to this part of the district. The banks and the inns, several insurance agency offices, and some well stored shops, represent the main business of the place. There are two libraries, a reading room, and a Freemason's lodge—the latter held in the town hall. The charter constituting Lauder, a royal burgh, was renewed in 1502, and the government vested in two bailies and fifteen councillors, chosen annually from amongst the freemen of the burgh. By the reform act it is joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh, in returning one member to parliament. The places of worship are two churches of the establishment, a free church, and a Presbyterian meeting house. The church, which stands to the south of the town-house, was erected in 1673, when the Duke of Lauderdale removed the more ancient church from the vicinity of his residence; the edifice, though cruciform, is not remarkable for elegance. The most conspicuous object in and about Lauder is Thirlstaine castle, a massive and spacious mansion, surrounded by a park and some fine wood, and is the seat of the family of Lauderdale. The castle which has lately been considerably enlarged, stands between the Leader and the town, on a fine lawn, is fitted up in the best taste of the time of Charles II., and decorated with massive balustrades and cornices, and a profusion of elaborately carved marble chimney-pieces; among the paintings, chiefly portraits, are some rare and valuable productions. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday of April and the fourth Friday of July, for cattle; and on the first Tuesday of March, and the fourth Friday of October, for general goods and for hiring servants.

The parish of CHANNELKIRK is situated among the Lammemoor hills, where they divide the counties of Edinburgh and Haddington from Berwickshire. On the banks of the rivulets, which, united, from the river Leader (or Lauder), are about two thousand acres in tillage; but the hills are mostly covered with heath, and are very bleak and unproductive. The small village of Channelkirk, which is about four miles from Lauder, is the first inhabited place that the traveller meets after issuing from the Lammemoor ridge; and descending southward into the vale of the Leader, about one mile distant, he arrives at UGSTON, the most considerable village in the parish, and where the little trade or business, that has existence throughout its entire extent, is almost exclusively centered.

POLWARTH AND FOGO.

POLWARTH, is a parish in the district of Merse—the village now almost decayed, is 40 miles from Edinburgh, four from Dunse, and about three and a half from Greenlaw—situated on the road between the two last-named towns. It was formerly of much greater extent, and, from its connexion with Scottish song, continues to the present day the most interesting locality in the district. On the green of Polwarth, in the centre of the village, it was an ancient custom for every new-married pair, with their company, to dance round an ancient thorn, the legend connected with which according to Chambers, might furnish materials for a good romance. The estate of Polwarth formerly belonged to Sinclair, of Hermandston, whose family, so far back as the fifteenth century, terminated in co-heiresses. It appears that the Misses Sinclair, of all their suitors, and they had many, preferred the sons of their powerful neighbour, Home of Wedderburn, and it so happened, that the youngest sister was beloved by the eldest Home (George), while the eldest placed her affections on the youngest, whose name was Patrick. After the death of the father of the young ladies, they fell into the hands of an uncle, who, anxious to prevent their marriages, that he himself might become their heir, immured them in his castle, somewhere in Lothian. In this dilemma, the fair prisoners contrived to get a letter transmitted to their lovers, by means of an old female beggar, and they were soon gratified with the sight of the two youths, accompanied by a determined band of Merse men, before the gate of their prison: the uncle made both remonstrance and resistance, but in vain; his nieces were forcibly taken from him and carried off in triumph. Part of the nuptial rejoicing (for the marriage ceremony immediately ensued), consisted in a merry dance round the thorn, which even at that early period, grew in the centre of the village. The lands of Polwarth were then divided between the two Homes; and while George carried on the line of the Wedderburn family, Patrick was the founder of the branch afterwards ennobled by the title of Marchmont. In commemoration of this remarkable affair for many years, all future marriage parties danced round the thorn; and a tune seems to have been composed, of the name 'Polwarth on the Green,' to which songs have been successively adapted. On the front of the parish church, (an ancient building) which stands about a mile east of the village, is a Latin inscription, importing that it was erected anterior to the year 900. In the vault of this church Sir Patrick Home, of Polwarth, afterwards the first Earl of Marchmont and Lord Chancellor of Scotland, found an asylum from the fury of his persecutors, when a price was set upon his head, till arrangements were made for his escape to Holland, which he happily effected. The noble mansion of the late Earl of Marchmont, together with the estate, is now the property of Sir H. P. H. Campbell, Bart., and his lady has established an infants' school.

The parish of Fogo, which lies to the south of that of Polwarth, is intersected and watered by the Blackadder, upon the right bank of which stream (said to be so fatal to the salmon species) stands the little village of Fogo; and about a mile further up the river is the ancient diminutive hamlet of CHESTER, reposing on the side of a Roman encampment. The parish is six miles in length by between three and four in breadth; the land chiefly arable, and fertile. A neat church and parish school are in the village.

SWINTON, WITH SIMPRIN, WHITSOME, LADYKIRK AND HORNDEN.

THE parish of SWINTON, to which that of SIMPRIN was united in 1761, is in the district of Merse. The parish is intersected by the small river Leet, and near thereto is the neat village of Swinton, lying about 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 12 S.W. of Berwick, and 6 N. of Coldstream. The small village of SIMPRIN is situated at the south-east corner of the parish. The estate of Swinton has been, for upwards of seven hundred and fifty years, the property of a family of that name, who originally acquired it as a reward for clearing the country of wild boars (or swine), whose mischievous and often ferocious depredations continually troubled and alarmed the inhabitants; the grant was afterwards confirmed by the royal ordonnance of Malcolm Canmore, for the exertions of the Swintons in reinstating him on the throne. The celebrated Mr. Thomas Boston, author of the 'Fourfold State,' was for some time minister of Simprin. There are two annual fairs; one is held on the third Thursday in June; the other on the fourth Tuesday in October.

WHITSOME (including the abrogated parish of Hill-ton), is about four miles and a half long, and two and a half broad. The land is principally composed of a deep rich clay, but there is some extent of marsh or oozy ground. The small village of Whitsome is situated nearly in the centre of the parish, at the distance of about three miles from Swinton.

The parish of LADYKIRK lies on the north bank of the Tweed, having the parish of Hutton on the north-east, and Whitsome and Swinton joining it on the west side; it extends about three miles along the margin of the river, with a breadth of from one to two. Lately, has been thrown across the Tweed here, a new bridge, constructed by subscription—a most valuable improvement to this locality, as fatal accidents frequently occurred by fording the river at this part. The church of Ladykirk, a venerable building, completely shrouded in ivy, stands near the Tweed, about four miles from Swinton and nine from Berwick. Tradition attributes its erection to the fourth James. In gratitude for his preservation from the violence of the flood, when fording the river here at the head of his army; he dedicated the edifice to 'Our Lady,' hence denominated Ladykirk, which name was subsequently extended to the whole parish, previously designated Upsellington. The soil of the district is naturally good from its local situation; cultivation has made it rich and beautiful.

The parish, which is six miles in length by four in breadth, is under the best process of husbandry. Spottiswoode—the fine residence of John Spottiswoode, Esq. is in this parish; Wedderlie—the seat of Lord Blantyre, is in the neighbourhood, and the ruins of Ively Castle—the walls of which are pretty entire, stand on the north eastern corner of the parish. It was one of those castellated mansions of residence and defence that were common on the borders before the union of the two crowns, in the reign of James VI. There are two places of worship—one under the establishment, the other a free church. There are also a free church school and a parochial one. # BUTESHIRE.

THE Islands of BUTE, ARRAN, GREAT and LITTLE CUMBRAY (or Cumbræ), and INCH-MARNOCH, compose this shire, which comprises 161 square miles of land, four square miles of lake, and, by a recent calculation, about 30,000 acres of cultivated and upwards of 70,000 of uncultivated ground. Though far separated from the properly denominated Western Islands, those of Bute statistically constitute a portion of the Hebrides. The northern extremity of Bute projects into the district of Cowal, Argyshire; and the water division between the island and the latter is often so slender that vessels find a difficulty in navigating the straits, which have obtained the title of 'the Kyles of Bute.' The southern part forms the western shore of the Firth of Clyde. About the middle it is narrowed by the indentation of bays on either side. The length of the island is fifteen, and its breadth averages five miles. Towards Cowal it is bleak and mountainous; but on the southern parts it consists of green fertile eminences or low hills, either affording excellent pasture, or capable, with the low grounds, of being cultivated so as to produce fine crops of barley, oats, &c. The island altogether is distinguished for picturesque beauty; and both the botanist and geologist will find it a rich field for their respective researches. The antiquary, also, will discover many relics of by-gone days existing in the island, among others the interesting ruins of Rothesay, East and West Kaines and Kilmory Castles. Here, as on all the west coast of Scotland, there is little or no extent of sea-beach, in comparison with other shores; the marine border is in most places rocky, with several good natural harbours. On the south-eastern side, the island is clothed with fine plantations, raised by the taste of the late Marquess of Bute, whose seat, Mount Stuart, an elegant modern mansion, lies on the woody slope facing the entrance to the Clyde.

The CLIMATE of Buteshire is eminently salubrious—neither mists nor noxious fogs, so prevalent in the east of Scotland, infest it; snow rarely lies on its hills, and the only qualification to its general genial character, is a liability to severe and sudden rains. In the interior, in a secluded situation, the late celebrated tragedian, Edmund Kean, erected a cottage, to which he purposed retiring from public life. The view of the island from the sea is enlivened by several other cottages on the different green declivities. Bute has for many years been the place of summer resort, for sea-bathing and ruralization, of the fashionable mercantile gentry of the west, who congregate chiefly in and about Rothesay, its capital, and contribute materially to the vivacity of the place.

The large Island of ARRAN lies to the southward of Bute, and between the peninsula of Cantyre and Ayrshire; in form it approaches an oval, extending from north to south nearly twenty-four miles and in breadth about fourteen. While Bute is mostly low and green, Arran is lofty and brown, with many heathy mountains, some of which exceed three thousand feet in altitude; a small portion of the lower grounds is cultivated, but the whole island is essentially and characteristically pastoral. There are several remarkable caves; the most distinguished is that on the west, opposite to Campbeltown, called 'the King's cave,' from its having afforded shelter to Robert Bruce before he discomfited Baliol and ascended the throne of Scotland: it is one hundred and twenty feet in length, sixty in height, and forty-eight in width. Arran belongs principally to the Duke of Hamilton, who has on the island an ancient though somewhat modernized seat, called Brodick Castle; it furnished the title of Earl to the chief of the house of Hamilton, who was regent during the minority of Mary Queen of Scots. The island comprehends two parishes, and its villages are Lamlash and Brodick. It is particularly famous for the excellence of its whisky; and coal, freestone and ironstone are said to lie beneath the surface of the soil. The beautiful little island of INCH-MARNOCH, rising a few miles south-west of Bute, is about a mile in length; near its eastern shore are the ruins of a chapel dedicated to Saint Marnoch. The CUMBRAYS are two small islands, lying in the Firth of Clyde, betwixt the isle of Bute and Ayrshire: the greater Cumbray lies highest up the Firth, and is two miles and a half in length by a breadth of one and a half, distant from the coast of Ayrshire about two miles. The capital and the only town on the island is Milnport, a neat little place on the north side, with a harbour. The island forms a parish, to which the lesser Cumbray is attached; this latter island is about a mile in length by a half a mile in breadth. These Cumbrays once belonged to the Norwegians, and were frequently the object of contest, with the Scots. Two-thirds of the larger Cumbray belong to the Earl of Glasgow, and the remainder is the property of the Marquess of Bute; the Earl of Eglington is the owner of the lesser Cumbray.

The island of Bute at one period contained ten or twelve parish churches, and about thirty hermitages of religious men; the island has now but two parishes, and the shire altogether only five. The sitting member is the Right Honble. James Stuart Wortley. The constituency in 1847 was 414. The only royal burgh is Rothesay; the county is represented in parliament by one member. Bute gives the title of Marquess to a family of the name of Stuart, a branch of the royal family of Scotland. The Marquess of Bute is descended in a direct line from Sir John Stuart, a son of Robert II, who by his father's grant became possessed of the island of Bute, with the heritable jurisdiction of the county, in which he was confirmed by a charter of his brother, Robert III. The family was elevated to an Earldom in the person of Sir James, a privy councillor of Queen Anne, in the year 1703. The present Marquess is a minor.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES OF KILBRIDE AND KILMORY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BRODICK AND LAMLASH, WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN has been partially described under the head of Buteshire, to which county it belongs. It is divided into two parishes KILBRIDE and KILMORY, and its villages are Lamlash and Brodick. Kilbride parish occupies about one-half of the island, on the east side extending eighteen miles in length, by a breadth of from four to six. This parish, and others of the same name, are said to have derived their designation from Saint Bride or Bridget; and the fame of this sainted female seems to have been extended over the whole of Britain. The ruins of the old church of Kilbride are still remaining. The present edifice, which is situated in Lamlash, was erected in 1774. The anchorage in the bay of this village is reckoned the best in the west of Scotland, affording perfect security to vessels driven by stress of weather from the Irish channel. The haven forms a natural basin, with the high protecting rocky islet of Holy Island lying at its mouth. On the inner side of the bay is the village, where there is a good inn. In this parish are some tall obelisks, which are supposed to be fragments of Druidical circles or places of worship. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the island; he munificently contributes a sum annually towards the repairs of the two packets on this station, as likewise for the support of a surgeon for the necessitous sick of the island. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, for the recovery of small debts, and the punishment of misdemeanors and other petty offences.

The parish of KILMORY occupies about half the island of Arran, on its western side, and the kirk of Kilmory is situate at its southern extremity. Arran Castle, the seat of the Duke of Hamilton, is placed on a rocky bank which rises from the north side of the bay of Brodick. The bank forms part of a peninsular elevation or shoulder, projecting from the base of Goatfield (or Goatfell) mountain, which eminence rises nearly three thousand feet above the level of the sea, and overlooks the three kingdoms. Brodick village contains a good inn. The island is noted for its station as a herring fishery; in a good season the value of the fish taken amounts to several thousand pounds, and a great number of the inhabitants are supported from this source of industry, whilst others are occupiers of small plots of land, in the cultivation of which they obtain subsistence. The climate of the island is considered highly salubrious, and the longevity of people is remarkable. A fair is held in Lamlash, on Lammas (old style), and at Brodick on the first Wednesday after the 20th of June; and another for horses in the month of January.

MILNPORT, ISLE OF CUMBRAY.

THE Isles of CUMBRAY (or Cumbræ) have been already noticed at a preceding page, in the description of Buteshire. MILNPORT (or Millport) is a small but improving sea-bathing village, charmingly situated on the south side of the greater Cumbray, about four miles from Largs, in Ayrshire; with which town a communication is maintained by means of a regular ferry boat, ready at any hour; while for the steam packets plying between this town and Ardrossan, Ayr, Greenock, and Glasgow, the excellent harbour and new pier here present perfect convenience for the landing or embarkation of passengers. Seventy years ago this place possessed only one dwelling, the hut of a fisherman.

The number of inhabitants in the two Cumbrays amount, at the present time, to about fifteen hundred, of whom a considerable proportion are resident in Milnport; and in the summer months, from the influx of visitors, a life and bustle is exhibited which forms an agreeable contrast to the quietude prevailing in other parts of the isles. The principal object of attention is a beautiful marine pavilion in the pointed style of architecture, belonging to the dowager Countess of Glasgow, who is owner of nearly two-thirds of the isle, the remainder belonging to the Marquess of Bute. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church and baptist and episcopalian chapels. The parish school is kept in a very neat structure, and well attended. The inhabitants of these isles are a class remarkable for their industrious habits—they are chiefly fishermen, owners of their own boats, and many of them are likewise weavers, who ply at the loom the whole day, and at night be-take themselves to the waters, as an additional means of subsistence. Some parts of the greater Cumbray are well cultivated, producing good wheat, and here and there may be seen some thriving plantations. On the western side of the lesser Cumbray is a lighthouse. This isle is the property of the Earl of Eglington.

ROTHESAY, PORT BANNATYNE &amp; NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ROTHESAY is a royal burgh, a town of great antiquity, and the capital of its parish; 96 miles w. from Edinburgh (by Mid-Catder), 40 s.w. from Glasgow, 22 from Lamlash, in the Isle of Arran, 12 from the Cumbrays, and 9 from Largs; finely situated at the head of a bay, called Rothesay, on the east side of the island of Bute, of which it is the capital, as well as of the shire. The origin of Rothesay was its castle, whose ruins yet exist, and the following are considered as some of the most remarkable particulars respecting it:—The first mention of it in history is in 1228, when it was besieged by Hushac, the Norwegian, in conjunction with Olave, King of Man, and taken after a stout resistance; having been recovered from the northern invaders, it was again taken by them about the year 1263, and retaken by the Scots shortly after the battle of Largs. It was seized by the English during the reign of John Baliol, but in 1311 it surrendered to Robert Bruce; in 1334, Edward Baliol took the castle, and fortified it; it soon afterwards, however, submitted to Bruce, the steward of Scotland. King Robert II. visited this castle in 1376 and in 1381; he again visited it in 1392, and subsequently created his eldest son, Prince David, the Duke of Rothesay, which has ever since been the principal Scottish title of the heir apparent. Additional facts are given in Mr. Wilson's admirable 'Guide to Rothesay,' to which we refer our readers.

The herring fishery, which has long been active here, caused a great revival in Rothesay, and stimulated the restoration of decayed buildings and the erection of new ones; fish curing is still carried on, but not to that extent now as formerly. Cotton spinning, and the manufacture of cottons and muslins by power looms, give employment to many hundreds of hands; there are four large mills or factories in Rothesay, worked by steam and water power. Three branch banks and one for savings, and several comfortable inns, are in the town—the Bute Arms Hotel, is conducted in a manner that gives satisfaction to its numerous visitants. The lodging houses are very numerous, and upon every scale. Mr. Wilson, the publisher of 'the Guide to Rothesay,' keeps a complete register, open for inspection, of every furnished house and lodging. About a mile to the east of the town is a salutary mineral spring, very efficacious in cutaneous diseases; near this is Dr. Paterson's Hydropathic establishment. The bay is very spacious, and the anchorage ground excellent; the quay was greatly enlarged, and the harbour much improved and deepened, about twenty-five years since, at a very considerable expense. On the north-east side of the entrance to the bay, from the Frith of Clyde, stand two fine and conspicuous lighthouses, the beacon of which is revolving and intermitting. The battery is placed a little beyond the end of Princes-street, on the shore of the east bay, and is mounted with several pieces of cannon. The town hall and county buildings were rebuilt, at an expense of upwards of £4,000., raised by assessments on the county and burgh, and by subscriptions; they form a handsome pile, and are ornamented with an elegant castellated tower, containing a bell, and beautiful clock, having two transparent dials, which at night are illuminated; the clock was the gift of the late lamented Marquess of Bute: the edifice comprises a spacious court-room, in which the sheriff, burgh and justice of peace courts are held, and the town and sheriff clerk's offices, with other requisite apartments: beneath the court-room is the prison. Rothesay was erected into a royal burgh by Robert III., under charter dated 12th January, 1490; and its privileges were confirmed and extended by James VI., in 1584. The government of the town is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, the town treasurer, and twelve councillors. The sheriff court is held on every Tuesday, and that for the burgh on Thursday during the session; a justice of peace court, for the recovery of small debts, sits on the first Monday in every month; the quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesdays in the months of March, May and August, and the last Tuesday in October; and all criminal cases, for the circuit court judiciary, are tried at Inveraray. The list of places of worship will be found at the end of the directory of the town, and the educational establishments at the commencement.

In the neighbourhood of this respectable town there are many mansions of the nobility and gentry. About five miles south is Mount-Stuart, the beautiful seat of the Marquess of Bute, at present a minor, in the occupation of the Marchioness and Lord James Stuart, the Marquess's uncle. In the same direction is Woodend, or (as it is more generally denominated) 'Kean's cottage,' from having been built by that eminent tragedian;

the house, which is now the residence of James B. Nelson, Esq., stands in a sweet retired spot, a little above the western shore of a fine fresh-water loch, whose waters are usefully employed in propelling the machinery of various mills. The climate of Bute being very salutary, from its mildness to those afflicted with pulmonary complaints, the faculty recommend numerous patients to the balmy influence of Rothesay. Four miles to the north-east, on the opposite shore of the bay, in Argyleshire, is Castle Toward, a massive modern edifice, erected by the late Kirkman Finlay, Esq., and now the residence of his son; the grounds contain the ruins of the ancient castle. In the neighbourhood of Mount-Stuart an extensive virescent fort has been discovered; and on the summit of a gentle eminence, called 'Chapel-hill,' rising above Argyle-street, are seen the remains of the ancient chapel of Saint Bride. A nominal weekly market is held on Wednesday; and fairs on the first Wednesday in May, third Wednesday and the following Thursday in July, and the last Wednesday in October—all chiefly for cattle.

PORT BANNATYNE is situated full two miles north from Rothesay, and is a fish-curing station; this branch of industry is, however, not prosecuted extensively at the present time. The port possesses a small quay, and there are several well-furnished houses—the latter occupied principally by the families who make this pleasant village a summer retreat; and the more temporary visitant will find in 'Port Bannatyne Inn' all the comfort they may need. Half a mile distant is the ancient Castle of Kames, the family mansion of James Hamilton, Esq., convenor of the courts. Nearly a mile to the west is the new church of North Bute, erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,000, defrayed by the Marquess of Bute; and between the village and Ardbeg point is a handsome Roman catholic chapel.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is the most northerly county of Great Britain, lying on the north-eastern extremity of Scotland. It is bounded by the German Ocean on the east, by Sutherlandshire on the south and south-west, and the Pentland Firth on the north separates the mainland from the Orkney Islands. In figure the county approaches to that of a triangle, and is nearly forty miles in length, and about twenty-five in breadth at the middle: altogether it comprehends 487 square miles of land, ten square miles of lake, 92,333 acres of land cultivated, and 347,347 acres uncultivated.

The EARLY HISTORY of this county is of little or no interest, owing to its distance from the central part of the Kingdom. It was anciently inhabited by the Catinii, from whom the present appellation is supposed to be derived. The names of various places and monumental remains indicate its having been the theatre of numerous petty exploits of the Danes and Norwegians. The ruins of Castle Sinclair and Gernego—the remains of old chapels, and other relics of antiquity—combine to prove that this district was inhabited at an early date. Caithness is an Earldom in the family of Sinclair. This peerage is of remote antiquity: before the year 1450 it was enjoyed by three successive families, who lost it either by forfeiture or extinction; at length it was renewed in the person of William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, a great-grandson by the female line of Robert II.; he was made chancellor of Scotland in the reign of James II. and received a grant of the Earldom of Caithness. The Earldom of Orkney having been derived from the King of Norway, though confirmed by a Scottish monarch, was resigned to the Crown in the Reign of James III. After a long period the title was revived, but not in the family of the Sinclairs of Caithness.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The county is in general level, with a few mountains on the borders of Sutherlandshire, and some eminences of trifling altitude throughout. The soil is almost entirely argillaceous heavy land, lying upon horizontal clay-slate, which in wet seasons keeps the water upon the surface. This district is nearly destitute of wood, and the few inclosures are but of a rude quality. The greatest elevations in this county, above the level of the sea, are—Maiden Paps, 2,000; Scarry Hills, 1,876; and Ord of Caithness, 1,250 feet. Although improvements have certainly been effected, much remains to be done to raise the condition of Caithness-shire to that of the adjacent counties. Since the year 1809, a better system of farming has been introduced, and the number of roads through the country has been augmented. Though black cattle form an article of consideration, this is rather an agricultural than a grazing county: clover and turnips are pretty broadly cultivated; the crops of grain are mostly limited to oats and bear, both of good quality, and the yearly export amounts to many thousand bolls. Besides cattle and corn, kelp, salmon, cod, herrings, bacon, with some butter and cheese, and lately a considerable quantity of wool, comprise the articles of exportation. The mountains abound with red deer and various kinds of game; and throughout the district hares, rabbits, grouse, plover, and a bird called the snowfleet, are in great plenty; the latter bird, about the size of a sparrow, is exceedingly fat and delicious. In the caverns along the coast, seals form their harbours: the hunters enter in small boats with torches, and with loud shouts alarm the animals, whom they kill with clubs as they attempt to pass into the sea. The county has no coal, and the principal fuel of the inhabitants is peat; freestone and limestone abound in many parts. The CLIMATE though by no means genial and mild, is temperate, considering its high latitude—the fifty-ninth degree—where the duration of the night, at one period of the year, is nineteen hours.

RIVERS, LAKES, &c.—In the interior there are upwards of thirty small fresh-water lakes, from which flow a number of streamlets, and some waters of greater magnitude: the principal among the latter are Fonn and Thurso rivers on the north-west, and Wick and BERRYDALE on the south-east. The most extensive loch is the Wattin, a fine sheet of water, about three miles in length, from which issues a branch of the River Wick. The only bays of any note are Sinclair Bay on the north-east, and Cannes Bay on the north.

Caithness-shire was anciently a bishopric, the earliest traces of which refer its origin to the twelfth century; at present it contains ten parishes, which constitute a presbytery. The shire contains one royal burgh—Wick, and a burgh of barony—Thurso: the county sends one member to parliament; and Wick, joined with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty, elects another representative.

LYBSTER IN LATHERON, AND SWINEY.

LYBSTER is a village in the parish of Latheron, 13 miles s. from Wick and 25 n. from Helmsdale; situated on the south-east side of the county: the parish extends from the Ord of Caithness twenty-seven miles along the coast, by a breadth of from thirteen to fifteen miles. The village, which some twenty or five-and-twenty years ago sprung from a mere waste, goes on increasing annually in population and habitations. The houses are substantially built and regularly laid out; and in the suburbs are some which are entitled to come under the description of neat and handsome residences. No port from Cromarty to the Orkney Isles has greater claims on the attention of the mariner, nor has any been more successfully or beneficially employed for the purpose of the herring fishery. From the indentation of its coast, with bold headlands at either side, which throw off the sweeping currents so general on the Caithness shores, there is comparatively still water at the entrance, and perfect security within the harbour: this is undergoing great improvements, and the attention of government has been called successfully to aid in the completion of the progressing works and perfect it as a harbour of refuge. The 'Brothers' Port,' the name bequeathed to this haven by the Scandinavians, who settled in Caithness in the eighth and tenth centuries, appears to have been much resorted to by these 'sea-kings,' or pirates; but it was subsequently destroyed by a devastating land-flood, which choked up the small river that flows into it with trees (still extant), earth, moss and stone; and thus converted into a solid beach and corn-field what theretofore was capable of affording shelter and safety to the largest ships of the present day: however, from the progress already made in clearing out this obstruction, there can be no doubt that, at an incredibly small expense, the importance of this valuable harbour may be increased even beyond its ancient reputation: a proof of the disastrous occurrence just related is furnished by the fact that, but an inconsiderable time since, mooring ring-bolts were to be seen at a rock three hundred yards from the present high water-mark. Upon a contiguous eminence the ruins of a Roman Catholic chapel, and some well-carved relics in Morayshire freestone, still survive the lapse of time. A good road intersects the parish along the shore, and on this road are some pretty villages, to which, however, no trade is attached but that of fishing.

A church of the establishment and a free church are the places of worship, and with these are connected schools. LATHERON kirk stands half way, on the coast, near to a road that crosses the country to Thurso.

The village of SWINEY (or Swinnie) lies further northward on the great north road to Wick and Thurso. A cattle fair is held at Lybster on the 12th November, and a sort of market for engaging men for the arduous employment of the fishing season takes place on the 20th July.

POST OFFICE LYBSTER, Alexander Findlayson, Post Master.—Letters from the SOUTH arrive every night at twelve, and are despatched half an hour after.—Letters from the NORTH arrive every night at half-past twelve, and are despatched upon the arrival of the South Mail.

THURSO AND THE VILLAGE OF CASTLETOWN.

THURSO is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, nearly 290 miles n. from Edinburgh, 20½ n. w. from Wick, the same distance w. from John o'Groats, 46 e. from Tongue, and 96 miles from Bonar Bridge, by way of Tongue and the Western road. Thurso is situated on the north-west coast of the county, at the head of a spacious bay, surrounded by a rocky coast; its headlands forming a bow, renders it one of the finest bays in the kingdom. Here the turbulent waves of the Pentland Firth and the powerful currents, find resistance on the east by Dunnet head, which stretches out its rocky promontory with a precipitous front; whilst the furious winds from the west are checked in their wild career by the Holburn head. Its original name, and what it is still called in the Gaelic language, is 'Inverhorsa,' Inver signifying the mouth of a river. It is said, and with probability, that the name is derived from Horsa, a Saxon general, who landed here in the fifth century. The Danes were the earliest possessors of Caithness. Torfaus, the Danish historian, mentions that, in the beginning of the eleventh century, Count Moddan quartered his army at Thurso, which he terms 'The Town of Caithness,' and that they were plentifully supplied with spoil from the neighbourhood, till subdued by Thorkel. He adds, that Moddan had his camp on the promontory of Thurso, where vestiges of a wall, which fortified it, may still be perceived. Dr. Barry states that Earl Erland, in the time of Malcolm II, king of Scotland, about the year 1005, resided for the most part at Thurso. Buchanan mentions many battles between Malcolm and the Danes, in Murray, which, in those times comprehended Caithness and all the northern counties of Scotland. Vessels of any burthen may find shelter in the bay under any weather, and few places possess superior advantages for refuge to the mariner as Scrabster roads as it is called. A pier has lately been erected by subscription, but not of that magnitude demanded by the nature of the place, and the depth of water which one upon a larger scale with the addition of a breakwater would ensure. The town, which is situated about two miles to the eastward, on the left bank of the river is regularly neat and clean, and the inhabitants are respectable—many indeed genteel and fashionable. The walks are romantic, and some approach close to the edge of the precipitous cliffs overhanging the sea. The river too is beautiful, and famed for the almost miraculous draughts of salmon occasionally furnished. Either bank is connected by an elegant stone bridge, but the want of a pier is much felt, as vessels intending to enter must wait the tide before they can cross the bar. This is a great inconvenience to the main export of the place, which consists of the 'Caithness pavement,' an article in great demand, and the manufacture of which is carried on to a prodigious extent and involves the prosperity of the place. The peculiar excellence belonging to this staple, is its durability, its resistance to moisture and its retention of an unbroken surface. Among other branches of consequence is an old established tannery celebrated for the article it prepares. Of the monetary establishments a branch of the National Bank of Scotland and a savings' bank, may be mentioned as useful in their respective departments. Thurso is a burgh of barony, holden of Sir George Sinclair as superior.

The places of worship are the parish church, a free church, and chapels for original seceders, independents and baptists. The church of the establishment is a neat gothic structure with a tower and clock—the latter presented by Henry Miller, Esq, now of London, but a native of Thurso. There are parochial and free church schools, well conducted and attended, and several highly respectable private ones for young ladies. A little to the east of the town stands Thurso Castle, the seat of Sir George Sinclair, Bart. an ancient building in excellent repair, and enlarged some years ago by an elegant, modern addition. Thurso parish gave birth to Richard Oswald, Esq. one of the plenipotentiaries from the court of Saint James, for settling the peace of 1783; it is also the birth place of Sir John Sinclair, of Ulbster, whose name is associated with the statistical account of Scotland, which was collected and published in consequence of his indefatigable exertions. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs on the second Tuesday in July, and the first Tuesday in September.

CASTLETON is a small neat village in the parish of Olrick (or Olrig), situated rather more than 15 miles N. w. of Wick, and nearly 6 E. of Thurso. In the immediate vicinity of the village is the mansion of James Traill, Esq. upon whose estate is quarried an excellent kind of stone, adapted to the purposes of flooring, and flagging foot ways, &c. It lies in beds of from three quarters of an inch to six inches in thickness. Blocks have often been raised measuring one hundred superficial feet; from hence they are carried to the shore, where they are prepared and dressed previous to shipping—to facilitate which the small and convenient harbour has been formed.

WICK.

IS a parish and royal burgh—the town a considerable one, improving and flourishing, is 290 miles N. from Edinburgh (20 of which may be saved by crossing the ferry from Tain to Dornoch), 61 N. by E. from Dornoch and 20 S. W. from Thurso; situated on the sea coast or bay of Wick, where the river of its name enters the North Sea. The town is divided into three parts—namely, Pulteneytown, Louisburgh and Wick. The old town, or rather Wick proper, is composed of the High street and Bridge street; the former runs from the bay along the curvature of the river, and is flanked on either side by several lanes. A few detached modern houses are impaired in appearance by the contiguity of older ones, with their gable ends towards the street. Bridge street, more regular in its construction, is ornamented by many elegant erections; among which the town and county buildings form a neat and handsome pile, faced with stone and surmounted by a cupola. The interior comprises a spacious apartment used as a council-room, and for the meetings of the Caitness Agricultural Society; also a court-room and other offices. Adjacent is a plain new building for holding the town and county court: behind is the gaol. The suburb of Louisburgh is regular in its streets and possesses some good buildings: a large temperance hall is among the latter; this was erected in 1840 by the munificence of Baillie Watters—a philanthropic patron of the place, who also originated a savings' bank, and is about to lay out a public bleaching green. Among other objects deserving notice here, is an extensive museum of natural curiosities and coins, the property of Dr. Sinclair, to which the public are courteously granted access.

Pulteneytown which may be reckoned the seat of the manufactures, commerce and fisheries of Wick—to which it is still considered a suburb, was purchased when a mere waste by the society in London, formed for extending the British fisheries, and various means have been adopted to carry out the great and beneficial object of the society. There are two harbours, but the depth of water within is not sufficient for ordinary class vessels; and during easterly winds the heavy swell in the bay renders it the most perilous sea-ground on the east coast—so that as yet the hopes and expectations of the society have not been fully realized. The erection of a pier, however, at the Salmon rock, would be of great importance, and obviate much of the inconvenience experienced by vessels commercially connected with this locality. This portion of the burgh has been laid out with a due regard to regularity and taste, having a large square in the centre, from which diverge numerous streets in different directions—those to the north being terminated by handsome terraces; whilst at the south are ranges of buildings, occupied by manufacturers of ropes, sail-cloth, &c. also a large distillery, a brewery and corn mills. Near the river's banks are saw mills—one of which, particularly, is of great power—its machinery working eight circular saws, in the manufacture of staves for barrels, from billets, and cutting ten thousand superficial feet daily. Ship-building has greatly diminished of late years, but boat-building has vastly increased.—There is still the extensive establishment in the former branch, of Mr. Bremner, whose engineering talents were successfully employed in floating the Great Britain, leviathan steam-ship, which grounded some few years since on the coast of Ireland: this gentleman has constructed here a floating dock capable of receiving vessels of five hundred tons burthen. The manufacture of rock-hill pavement is largely carried on here, and there is an iron foundry, and a tobacco and snuff-mill; but the herring trade must be taken as the staple, and in the season the fishery is prosecuted to a prodigious extent; the population is doubled here at this time by persons from all parts, and the bay is crowded with boats, manned frequently by three thousand persons engaged in the trade, besides great numbers, both male and female, employed in the process of curing the fish. The scene at this period is very animated both on the water and the land. Two bank establishments are settled here—namely, branches respectively, of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and of the 'Aberdeen Town and County Bank';—the premises of the first named, which stand in Bridge-street, present a handsome front, decorated with Ionic columns. Near the market (which is about to be greatly improved by suitable convenient additions) is the Caitness National Security Savings' Bank—a very useful institution to this district. Three hotels afford the accommodation found at well conducted establishments of the kind—they are situated respectively in Bridge-street, High-street and Pulteneytown. Two newspapers issue from the press of Wick weekly—they are noticed with their titles under their proper head.

Wick was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1593, by the influence of George Earl of Caitness, whose principal residence was at the strong castle of Gernego, concerning the antiquity of which there is no tradition, but by its construction and workmanship it appears to have been of Danish origin; it is situated about two miles from Wick, and the greater part of its walls are still standing. The Duke of Sutherland is superior of Wick, which is the county town of the shire, a parliamentary burgh, and the station of returns at elections: it joins with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty, in returning a member to the imperial parliament; the present representative is James Loch, Esq. The government of the town is vested in twelve councillors, from whom are chosen a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer—their jurisdiction, however, is confined to narrow limits, a preference being given to the justice of peace and sheriff's courts: the former sits every alternate Monday; the latter every Tuesday, with power to appoint a sitting when and where within the county.

There are places of worship both of the establishment and the free church of Scotland, and others for congregations of united presbyterians, independents, cameronians, and Roman catholics: the locality of each and their officiating ministers are given in the directory. There are a few good schools, some friendly associations, and one of an agricultural character. The Pulteneytown Academy was founded and endowed by the British Fishery Society. A good subscription library is well supported by a number of respectable members; and some other societies exist of an educational tendency. A market is held every Friday, and fairs on the first Tuesday after Palm Sunday, the first Tuesday after the feast of Saint John the Baptist, the first Tuesday after the 21st of July, and the first Tuesday after the 17th of November (old style).

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

THIS county, the smallest in Scotland, is bounded on the south and west by the Frith of Forth and Stirlingshire, and on the north and east by Perthshire; on the east also, it joins, for a short distance, the county of Fife; and a detached portion of Stirlingshire touches part of its northern verge. Its figure, which is extremely irregular, does not exceed nine miles at its greatest length, nor more than six at its extreme breadth.

Anciently the whole of that valuable territory lying between the rivers Forth and Tay, and bounded on the north-west by the chain of the Ochil hills, was called Ross, as being a sort of peninsula, terminating at Stirling. In course of time the district of Ross was divided amongst the shires of Fife, Kinross, and Clackmannan, with the introduction of a slip of Perthshire, on the edge of the Forth, in which is situated the Town of Culross. Among the ancient structures of the county are three old towers: one of them near Clackmannan, is said to have been erected by Robert Bruce; another contiguous to the Devon Iron Works, is supposed from its similarity of architecture, to have been built by the same person, or about the same period; the third the Alloa tower, is more particularly noticed in the description of that town. From the shore of the Forth the surface of the county rises gradually to the Ochil hills, the highest of which (Benclough) attains the height of two thousand feet above the level of the sea, and is in the parish of Tillicoultry. The higher grounds are partly pastoral, but the whole of the lower parts, adjacent to the Forth, are rich, arable, and beautifully enclosed. Besides the Forth the county is watered by two other streams—namely, the Devon, and the Black Devon; and it is connected with RAILWAYS by means of a branch from the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee line, communicating with Alloa, Clackmannan and Dollar.

MANUFACTURES, PRODUCE, &c.—The manufacture of woollen goods, in shawls, plaidings and blankets had been for many years established in the parishes of Dollar, Tillicoultry, and Alva, with complete success, and the villages belonging to them have become thriving places in consequence; and furnish employment to many hundreds of persons. Throughout the whole district coal is worked, and ironstone which is abundant is wrought to advantage.

This shire contains four parishes, and two portions of parishes; its only towns are Alloa, and Clackmannan; and its principal villages are Dollar, Alva, and Tillicoultry. The county possesses neither royal or parliamentary burghs, but it unites with KINROSS-SHIRE in returning one member to parliament.

ALLOA.

WITH THE VILLAGES OF SAUCHIE, TULLIBODY, MENSTRIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ALLOA is a town of considerable commercial importance, and the capital of its parish; 30 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 32 s. from Perth, 7 from Stirling, the same distance from Dollar, five from Kincardine, and three from Tillicoultry; situated on a branch of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway, for which line there is a station in the town. The town stands on level ground at the base of a gentle declivity, close to the Forth, at the spot where it ceases to be a river and becomes a frith; the water is nevertheless deep enough, for six miles above this place, to admit vessels of seventy tons. The quay stretches along the bank; and large vessels or steam-boats can thus lie close up to the thoroughfare, much to the convenience of passengers and the more worthy of appreciation as this is the only port on the Frith at which such can be accomplished with perfect ease and safety at any tide. Of late years the trade of Alloa has greatly increased; and the town and neighbourhood has long been noted for its extensive distilleries, breweries, maltings, glass works, and collieries, together with several extensive woollen manufactories. Immense quantities of whisky are made here for the London market, and the quality and quantity of the ale exceed those of any town in Scotland. An extensive brick and tile manufactory, foundry, and copper works (which furnish most of the implements or apparatus for the distilleries), have likewise been for years established here. About one hundred vessels, of various burthens, belong to Alloa and its adjacent creeks. The exports comprise pig iron, ale, whisky, glass, coal, wool, and woollen goods; the imports are timber, oak bark, hides, butter, cheese, and large supplies of grain for malting. A daily communication with Edinburgh, Stirling, and the towns on the Frith, is afforded by the steam-packets throughout the year; and the ferry steam boats (on board of which a carriage and four horses may be driven, without either horses or passengers being removed), give every facility to families proceeding to the opposite county of Stirling. On the south side of the Forth, opposite to Alloa, are the Alloa Coke Company's Works, lately established by William Hartley, Esq

A shipping port is intended to be formed at this part of the Forth; the great depth of water, together with the facility of railway transit, point to this locality as eminently eligible for the purpose projected. The ordinary and small debt courts are held here weekly; a sheriff and a justice of peace courts for the county at stated periods, and a fairs court annually: the principal municipal officer is a baron baillie.

The established church, which was first opened for divine worship on the 20th of June, 1819, forms the most prominent object in the town: it is a fine structure, in the pointed style of architecture, and was raised at an expense of nearly £7,000; the spire is very handsome, and was added to the tower by a public subscription; the Earl of Mar, from his own liberality, considerably improved the interior. The other places of worship are two free churches, and one each for the united presbyterians and Scotch episcopalians; the last named occupies a pleasant site to the east of the town, in the midst of tastefully laid out grounds. The educational institutions embrace a charity school, a parochial school, an academy, several Sabbath evening schools, and the Alloa colliery school. A public assembly room has been long upheld; a library, instituted in 1797, is supported by an annual subscription and entrance fee from each member; a news-room, supplied with London and local papers and a bowling-green, give to every class its appropriate portion of rational recreation. The convivial festival of 'King Crispin' was first celebrated here in 1824, with the customary pomp, pageantry, and ceremonies. Two newspapers are published in Alloa every alternate Saturday; they are conducted with considerable talent, and enjoy a respectable circulation.

Though Alloa itself possesses few objects of attraction, its immediate neighbourhood presents scenery at once lovely, bold, and picturesque: on the north side is the proud range of the Ochil hills, covered with verdure to their very summits, and are, perhaps, unrivalled in the fascination of Scottish landscape; the south displays the Forth in all its natural splendour, and its borders the embellishments of rural taste; Stirling Castle on the west, and Alloa and Clackmannan Towers on the east, empower the pencil to complete the picture, and present to the eye a panorama of no common brilliancy. The noble and ancient family of Mar have long been the proprietors of this place: they forfeited the earldom by their participation in the ill-digested rebellion of 1715, and the title and privileges were not restored until June, 1824, when the inhabitants, on the welcome intelligence of the resumption of these appanages by their landlord, the late John Francis Earl of Mar (who had endeared himself to his tenantry by a life devoted to the promotion of their happiness and the prosperity of Alloa), celebrated the event by every demonstration of gratitude and joy. Alloa Tower was long the residence of this family; it is a quadrangular building, and though time and the elements are hastening its decay, it is still a place of great strength. The walls are eleven feet thick, and the highest turret is eighty-nine feet. It was built by the sovereigns of Scotland previous to the thirteenth century, and is a stately remnant of feudal grandeur. It has frequently been the resort and residence of royalty. The beautiful and unfortunate Mary spent a portion of her youth and maturity with the Mar family; her son James, also, passed many of his youthful days here, having been committed by his mother to the then Earl of Mar; and his son, Prince Henry, received part of his education in this tower, under the celebrated George Buchanan. The prospect from the summit is beautiful and extensive, and worthy the attention of the tourist and stranger. The tower is now uninhabited.

The market is abundantly supplied with every necessary on Wednesday and Saturday, particularly on the latter day; cattle fairs are held on the second Wednesday in February, May, August, and November—all new style.

SAUCHIE (New and Old), are populous villages immediately contiguous to each other, in the parish of Alloa, two miles north from that town, on the road to Alva. A great number of colliers, employed in the Mar collieries, reside in these villages, and there are schools in which their children are instructed.

TULLIBODY parish was united to that of Alloa about the time of the Reformation. The ancient kirk of Tullibody was unroofed under circumstances of a peculiar character: in the year 1559 it was made to serve the purpose of a bridge across the Devon for the French troops when they retreated before the English. The church continued in a dismantled condition for upwards of two centuries, when it was again covered in by George Abercrombie, Esq. of Tullibody, and fitted up as a place of worship for the use of this populous district.

MENSTRIE is a village in the parish of Logie, and the southern part of Perthshire; situated at the base of the Ochil hills, on the road from Stirling to Dollar, five miles from the former and two from Alva. The manufacture of blankets and different kinds of woollen fabrics give employment to many of the inhabitants.

CLACKMANNAN AND LOGIE,

CLACKMANNAN, the capital of its county and likewise of the shire, though not entitled to rank as the latter from either its size, commercial importance, or population, is 32 miles N. W. from Edinburgh, and two from Alloa, pleasantly situated on an eminence, gently rising out of a plain from east to west to the height of nearly two hundred feet above the level of Forth. At one period, this was a town of some consequence; but since the improvement of Alloa, and the superior commercial facilities possessed by that place, Clackmannan has sunk into comparative insignificance: the surrounding scenery, however, is of a very delightful description, and is viewed to great advantage from Clackmannan Tower, which occupies a commanding site a little west of the town. Tradition states that this town was built by King Robert Bruce, close to which he had his palace, not a vestige of which latter now remains. The tower is eighty feet high and contains a variety of apartments, reached by means of a spiral staircase.

The principal trade is that derived from the coal mines, which supply employment and humble competence to many of the industrious classes. The soil of the parish is considered the richest arable in the shire, and is under the best state of cultivation. The places of worship are the parish church, a free church and one for united presbyterians. The first-mentioned was erected in 1814, at an expense of £4,500, and is a spacious and handsome structure, equal to the accommodation of two thousand persons. The other public institutions are the parochial school and a society for general religious purposes.

The village of LOGIE is most agreeably seated at the base of the Ochil hills, at the entrance to Glen-devon, and presents a singularly pleasing scene of natural beauty. The kirk, which is small and neat, stands about five miles from Alloa. The parish of Logie, or Blair-Logie, lies partly in the shires of Stirling, Perth and Clackmannan—the larger portion being on the North bank of the river Forth, opposite Stirling. Within the parish, on a flat peninsula, formed by a sinuosity of the river, the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth abbey presents itself; the plain adjacent was the arena in which Wallace obtained his first open and signal victory over the arms of King Edward.

DOLLAR, ALVA AND TILLCOUNTRY.

DOLLAR is a parish and village—the latter an improving little place is 9 miles from Clackmannan and 7 from Alloa; situated near the eastern extremity of the Ochil range of hills, on the road from Fife to Stirling, 12 miles from the latter town. A great proportion of the consequence this village now enjoys is to be ascribed to the establishment and endowment of an academy, by a Mr. M'Nabb, a native of the parish, who having realized a considerable fortune in London, bequeathed a large sum to found an institution in his native district, for the education of young persons.
A very handsome edifice was consequently erected in 1819, and masters selected to teach the Latin, Greek, and oriental languages, together with French and other modern tongues, and mathematics, natural philosophy, geography, English, drawing, writing and arithmetic: a female teacher is also connected with the institution. The building is an elegant one, in the Grecian style, having some pleasant garden ground attached for the use of the students. About five years ago an Act of Parliament was obtained through the influence of the sheriff of the county, constituting four permanent trustees, and nine others who are qualified by the possession of a certain amount of property in the county, and elected every five years. Previous to the passing of this act the parish minister and kirk session of Dollar were vested with the trusteeship. From the period of the establishment of this institution, Dollar has been fast emancipating itself from the shades of obscurity, and many handsome villas now grace the village and its vicinity; while some well furnished shops and a respectable inn impart to it an appearance highly contrasted with the defects it presented previous to the opening of the academy. At Dollarfield are extensive and old established bleach works, the property of Robert Haig, Esq.; and in the village is a branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow bank. In the neighbourhood is the remarkable ruin of Castle Campbell, once the occasional residence of the Argyll family, and which was taken, in 1644, by the Marquis of Montrose. The remains occupy the summit of a high and almost insulated rock; and in the hill itself is a frightful chasm, called the 'Kemp's Score,' which still bears some marks of a staircase. The situation of these relics of former strength and grandeur is highly romantic and interesting, and will amply repay the stranger for turning aside to contemplate both the ruins and the scenery.

ALVA is a thriving village, three miles from Alloa, charmingly situated at the foot of the Ochils, whence issues a rivulet that turns several mills, and forms, in its course through the romantic and interesting Glen of Alva, three beautiful cataracts. The largest of the falls issues from an aperture in the rock above, and tumbles in one unbroken mass into a naturally-formed basin below. This parish belongs to Stirlingshire, although locally detached from that county, and surrounded on all sides by Clackmannan. It affords excellent pasture, is in some places well cultivated, and the hills abound with valuable ores, and the district with coal, which later is wrought to a great extent by the Alloa Coal Company, and vast quantities are shipped to distant parts. The manufacture of woollen goods, consisting of fancy plaids, shawls, tartans, &c. is carried on in the village and its neighbourhood very extensively, and numerous hands find busy employment in the different mills—these with their tall red chimneys exhibit an interesting contrast with the lofty Ochils and the surrounding plain. Though recognised only as a village Alva exceeds, in size and commercial importance, very many of the Scottish burghs, and the same remark may be justly made concerning its neighbour Tillicoultry. The 'House of Alva,' the residence of a respectable branch of the family of Johnstone, stands on an eminence, projecting from the base of Wood Hill, about two hundred and twenty feet above the base of the Devon, and fourteen hundred below the apex of the mountain. From the top a most extensive view is had of the whole course of the Frith of Forth, the coast of Fife and East Lothian.

The manufacturing village of TILlicoultry is two miles east of Alva, and four west of Dollar; pleasantly situated on the side of the Ochil Hills, and on the road from Stirling to Kinross—nine miles from the former, and fourteen from the latter town. It is well supplied with water from the Devon, which bounds the parish on the north, and intersects it also on the southern part. Tillicoultry is fast becoming a place of some consequence from the woollen manufactures established here, and likewise on the Devon side, chiefly for making shawls, plaidings, blankets, &c.: in these branches the village and its neighbourhood furnish employment to a very large number of the industrious class; some of the mills supporting as many as five hundred persons. A branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow bank, and a bank for savings are established in the village. The parish abounds with coal which is profitably worked, and there is a good quarry of freestone. The scenery of this neighbourhood is as interesting as that in any other part of this charming little county. The hills to the northward are said to contain various kinds of minerals; and about a century ago a copper mine here was wrought by a London company: the metal sold at £50 per ton, but from the thinness of the seams the works were abandoned as unprofitable. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church, and one each for the presbyterian and independent congregations.

POST OFFICE, TILlicoultry, Thomas Walker, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning about half-past five, and are despatched at six in the evening.

All letters connected with the above places arrive from, and are despatched through, the STIRLING Post Office.

DUMBARTONSHIRE.

ANCIENTLY designated LENNOX, and subsequently Dun-bartonshire (which latter, though not the most popular, is the proper appellation), is a small county in the west of Scotland, and considered as within the boundary of the Highlands. On the west it is separated from Argyleshire by Loch Long; Perthshire touches its northern extremity; the county of Stirling bounds it on the east, and also on the north; Lanarkshire on the south-east; and the Clyde separates it from the county of Renfrew on the south. The figure of this county is rather singular: it describes almost a perfect crescent or semi-circle, protruding on the south and south-west—its concavity being filled, through its whole extent, on the north and north-east, by the county of Stirling. The distance between its eastern and northern extremities is nearly forty miles; while the breadth of the shire is from five to thirteen, and in one part it is only two miles broad. The parishes of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, however, are not included in this measurement, being detached from the main portion on the south-east, and lying between the counties of Lanark and Stirling: this severed portion of the county is twelve miles long, by from two to four and a half miles broad, and was annexed to the district in the reign of Robert I. Altogether the shire comprises two hundred and sixty one square miles: between fifty and sixty thousand acres are cultivated, and the remainder are mostly pastoral hills, woods and lakes—of the latter there are about thirty-one square miles.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—In ancient times the appellation of this shire was Levenach, signifying 'the country of the Leven', which was corrupted in the course of years to Levenax, and more latterly to Lennox. Originally this district was the residence of a British tribe designated the Attacotti, or Eithacotti—a word importing 'dwellers along the extremity of the wood.' The descendants of this people were not enslaved, or expelled from their hunting grounds, by the Romans: they became known as the Britons of Strath-Clyde; and, though almost perpetually at variance with their neighbours, they remained a distinct race till the reign of Malcolm IV. From these people the name of Dumbartonshire is said to be derived, and taken from the appellation of the castle, signifying 'the hill of the Britons.' This region, until the early part of the last century, continued to be the ready prey of certain lawless Highland clans, who lurked in the recesses of its interior; and were finally extirpated, or reduced to quiescence and subordination, only by the most vigorous measures that could be adopted by the civil government of the country. It was at one period the property of a powerful family of Saxon origin, one of whom called Alwyn, the son of Arkil was elevated to be Earl of Lennox in the reign of William the Lion, and his descendants for several centuries were at once heritable sheriffs of the county, and chief possessors of its lands. The Earldom of Lennox was raised to a Dukedom in 1581; but Charles, the sixth Duke, dying without issue in 1672, the honours of the family, including the Earldom of Darnley, devolved on Charles II, as nearest male heir, who bestowed them on his natural son, Charles Lennox, after whose demise the estates were sold.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—In recent times, great improvements have been effected in this county, and every year its prolificacy and value are increasing in amount. The soil and climate having been found favourable to the growth of timber, the district now wears a warmer and more cheerful aspect than formerly, while the income accruing from produce has been in a corresponding degree augmented. The cattle of the shire are chiefly of the West Highland breed, some of which are reared in the county; the dairy has become an object of attention and profit on most farms. The roads throughout have been greatly extended and improved within the last fifty years, a measure highly conducive to the agricultural and manufacturing interests. Nearly a century has elapsed since the manufacturing dawn broke upon this part of Scotland; bleach-fields, about that period, made their appearance on the banks of Loch Lomond and the Leven; about 1768 the first print works were established on the Leven, soon afterwards others sprung into operation, and at this time there are various manufactures carried on throughout the shire; ship building, both iron and wood, is a branch of great importance, and is carried on with spirit at Dumbarton. Until 1831, the glass-works of this county were in high repute, Dumbarton being their chief seat; but in consequence of the decease of the principals engaged together in this business, it has ceased to exist. Dumbartonshire does not contain numerous mineral treasures within its bosom; but it has an abundance of freestone and slate, and some ironstone.

MOUNTAINS AND LAKES.—These are the most remarkable objects in the county: of the former, the chief are those of Arrochar, Luss, Row, and Roseneath, which are inaccessible to the plough and abound with moors, mosses, and woods; the hills of Kilpatrick, on the south, are much less elevated: Benvoirlich, adjoining Perthshire, has the highest altitude, rising 3,330 feet above the level of the sea. The precipitous and rugged summits of these mountains, constituting the Highland district, are frequently capped with snow, and in the finest weather hid amidst the clouds; some of these eminences are apparently volcanic, particularly the rock on which Dumbarton castle stands. There are about ten lakes or lochs; among these are Loch Long and Loch Gare, projecting into the Highland territory from the Firth of Clyde; but the most extensive, and, perhaps, the most beautiful lake in Scotland, is that of Loch Lomond: it lies at the foot of the Grampian mountains, which terminate here, but seem to rise in many islands that appear a continuation of them, or like fragments torn off by some violent convulsion of nature. These islands, thirty-two in number, are lofty and picturesque: on Inch Cailoch (or the Island of Nuns) are the remains of a conventual church; and on Inch Murrins (or the Island of St. Murrinus), two miles long, and converted into a deer-park, are the ruins of a house, once belonging to the Lennox family. This magnificent expanse of water is thirty miles long, in some places eight broad, and covers a surface of 20,000 acres; the depth varies from twenty to one hundred fathoms; it abounds with delicious trout, and the southern part has salmon: the purity of the stream and richness of its banks sooth the mind of the traveller; while the bleach-fields, print-works and cotton mills, the villages, hamlets and gentlemen's seats, scattered over an apparently remote district, must impress him with an exalted idea of the industry and wealth of the inhabitants. The lake discharges its waters into the Clyde by the river Leven, which is the only stream of any note in the district.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Dumbartonshire is divided into twelve parishes, ten of which form the presbytery of Dumbarton; it contains but one royal burgh—DUMBARTON, four burghs of barony, and three villages. The only contributory burgh (or that which, in conjunction with others, is represented in the senate), belonging to the county is Dumbarton, it unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock, and Port Glasgow, in returning one member to the imperial parliament.

BONHILL, ALEXANDRIA, BALLOCH, RENTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BONHILL is a thriving manufacturing little town, in the parish of its name, 61 miles w. from Edinburgh, 18 n.w. from Glasgow, 3 n. from Dumbarton, and within one mile of the beautiful and celebrated Loch Lomond: situated on the east side of the Leven, and connected with ALEXANDRIA by an iron suspension bridge. Very considerable business is done here in calico printing, bleaching, and dyeing; and it is altogether a prosperous little place. The town consists of one long and tolerably well built street: about the centre of it, on the margin of the Leven, stands the parish church, a fine building of gothic architecture, with a square tower, containing a handsome clock; it was finished in 1836, at an expense of nearly £3,000, and contains about twelve hundred sittings. A free church erected in 1844, is an elegant building of red freestone, with a tapering spire; it occupies a commanding site a little to the south of the parish church. On a gentle eminence, near the new bridge, is an united presbyterian church, erected in 1830; and about a mile north of the town, at the small village of DAMHEAD, is the parish school, which has been conducted by its present deservedly respected master for nearly half a century. There is also a subscription school in the town, which was erected in 1790, and a society which provides education for children whose parents are not in a condition to secure such advantage for them. In 1836 a fine suspension bridge, of iron, was thrown over the Leven. The span is 138 feet, and it cost, with the approaches, £2,200; which was defrayed by Captain Smollett, Esq. of Bonhill. It was erected by Mr. C. Atherton, of Glasgow, civil engineer. The land on both sides the Leven is in a high state of cultivation, which, together with the respectable residences of the proprietors and manufacturers, and the recent improvements and erections, impart to this place an appearance highly prepossessing. A fair is held on the first Thursday in February, for horses.

About a mile north-west from Bonhill, at the south end of Loch Lomond, is BALLOCH, which contains a tolerably good inn, and is the terminus of the Dumbartonshire railway. In 1842, Sir James Colquhoun Bart. of Luss, erected an elegant suspension bridge across the Leven water; previous to which passengers were greatly inconvenienced by the ferry then in use. This bridge is twenty miles from Glasgow, by Renton and Dumbarton, but by avoiding the latter place and passing through Bonhill, the distance is reduced to eighteen miles. A fair is held at Balloch, on the 15th of September, for the sale of horses.

ALEXANDRIA is an increasing and considerable village, on the east side of the Leven, opposite to Bonhill; on the banks of the river, below the village, are several extensive print and dye works, a mill for grinding dye woods, &c. Its site is more commanding than that of Bonhill, and its situation both healthy and pleasant. A school was erected here, by subscription, in 1829; which is a well conducted institution. About a mile from the village stands Tullichewin Castle, a noble edifice, the residence of William Campbell, Esq. from which an extensive view of the river, and of the glen through which it winds, is obtained. Between this seat and Alexandria is the neat mansion of Broomley, which is also the property of William Campbell, Esq., and two miles distant is Cameron House, the tasteful seat of Alexr. Smollett, Esq. M.P. of Bonhill.

RENTON is also a large village, in the parish of Cardross, one mile s.w. from Bonhill, the like distance s. from Alexandria, and 2 n. from Dumbarton, most eligibly situated on the west bank of the Leven, which winds with much beauty below the town, and on whose banks are extensive print works. In the immediate neighbourhood of Renton is the old mansion house of Dalquhurn, in which the celebrated historian and novelist, Tobias Smollett, was born. A monumental column, bearing a latin inscription, is here erected to his memory; it is a round pillar of stone work, sixty feet in height, springing from a square base. This memorial was erected by the descendants of that talented individual, but it is to be regretted that it has become much defaced through neglect. In the village is a chapel for original burghers, and an evening school for children employed in the print works.

CUMBERNAULD, CONDORRET & NEIGHBOURHOOLS.

CUMBERNAULD is an ancient village in the parish of its name; 33 miles w. from Edinburgh, 29 E. from Dumbarton, 14 N.E. from Glasgow, 13 S. from Stirling, 9 w. from Falkirk, 7 E. from Kirkintilloch, and 7 N. from Aldrie; situate on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh through Falkirk, about two miles south of the Forth and Clyde canal, and the line of railway between Edinburgh and Glasgow. The principal business is the weaving of checks, and other striped cotton fabrics, by hand-loom, for the Glasgow manufacturers; and in the neighbourhood are several coal and lime works, and a quarry of good freestone. A baron baillie is appointed by Captain Fleming, who holds a court here in the beginning of January, April, July, and October, for cases of misdemeanour and fines of £1., and for small debts amounting to £2. The parish church is at the west end of the village, occupying a commanding site, and embosomed amongst trees. Cumbernauld possesses a good public library and subscription news-room. The country around the village is well wooded, and agreeably varied with gentle eminences and rural dales. The principal mansion in the parish is Cumbernauld House, belonging to Captain Fleming. Fairs are held on the first Tuesdays in May and August—the former for cattle and horses, the latter for toys, &c.

CONDORRET is a small village, in the parish of, and about three miles west from Cumbernauld. The inhabitants are chiefly employed at the hand-loom, in weaving checks and lapet muskies for the manufacturing Glasgow houses.

POST OFFICE, CUMBERNAULD, William Allan, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from GLASGOW) every morning (Sundays excepted) at a quarter past nine, and evening at five, and are despatched thereto at seven in the morning, and six in the evening.—On Sundays letters arrive at one in the afternoon, and are despatched at a quarter past ten in the morning.

DUMBARTON,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF CARDROSS AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMBARTON is a royal burgh and sea-port, the capital of the county and of the parish to which it gives name; 59 miles w. from Edinburgh, 15 n.w. from Glasgow, 8 s.e. from Helensburgh, and 3 s. from Bonhill; situate on a low piece of ground, encompassed on its western quarter by the Leven, about half a mile from its junction with the Clyde, and almost secluded from the view of persons on the latter river by the intervening castle of Dumbarton, which stands on a huge rocky eminence on the edge of the Frith, about half a mile from the town. The rock of Dumbarton measures a mile in circumference at its base, diminishing in breadth near the top, which is cloven into two summits, one higher than the other; these are almost perpendicular, and rise to the height of more than three hundred feet. The fortress is entered by a gate at the bottom, and within the rampart which defends the entrance is the guardhouse and lodging for the officers; from hence the ascent is by some flights of steps to the part where the rock divides, here is a strong battery, barracks for the garrison, and a reservoir always filled with water; above these are several batteries which command a most extensive range, especially up and down the Clyde; its defences are kept in constant repair, and it is garrisoned by a limited body of soldiers and functionaries. The house of the governor is injudiciously placed in the cleft of the rock, and erected in a style quite out of character with the picturesque outlines of the precipice. Some parts of the rock are magnetic, and from the crevices there grow a profusion of wild plants, amongst which appropriately predominates the Scotch thistle, now an exceedingly rare production in its natural state. The rock of Dumbarton has been occupied by works of a warlike character throughout the successive dynasties of eighteen hundred years, and consequently is the most ancient stronghold in the country of which any record or tradition is preserved. In Bede's time it was deemed almost impregnable; but it was reduced by famine in 756, and taken by escalade in 1571; at other periods it has sustained sieges and assaults which our space will not permit us to detail.

Dumbarton suffered severely from an inundation of the rivers Clyde and Leven some time prior to 1607, for in that year parliament granted the inhabitants 37,000 merks Scottish for raising bulwarks to prevent a similar calamity, with a cession of all the recovered lands. The present town is chiefly composed of one main street, lying in a semicircular form round the head or west end of the peninsula; there are some bye thoroughfare lanes and detached houses, and a su-

burh on the west side of the Leven, leading to Renton; it is connected with the latter by a good stone bridge of five arches, reaching three hundred feet in length. The waters of the Leven form a commodious harbour, and to promote the facility of trade an excellent quay and capacious dock have been constructed, principally at the expense of the late James Lang, Esq., a considerable proprietor in the vicinity; the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas, by a company formed in 1832. Dumbarton was long famed for the manufacture of crown glass; but that branch was extinguished by the death, in 1831, of all the principal proprietors of the works. The discontinuance of this source of industry and emolument has been severely felt by the inhabitants, and proved a serious drawback upon the previous prosperity of the town—as may be evinced by the fact that, when these works were in active operation, they furnished labour to three hundred workmen, and annually consumed 15,000 tons of coal, besides employing 10,000 tons of shipping—and has paid from £40,000. to £50,000. excise duties per annum: the property lately passed into other hands, and an engineering establishment is in course of construction by Messrs. Tulloch & Denny, on a portion of the premises. The principal trade, and on which the prosperity of the town chiefly depends is that of ship building, which is carried on here extensively and with great spirit, and for which there are four extensive yards, two being exclusively for the construction of iron ships; and, perhaps, no other town in Britain can surpass Dumbarton in this line of business. Distillery, brewing, tanning, iron-founding and rope making, are also carried on to a limited extent. In the High street there are two superior hotels, the 'Elephant' and the 'King's Arms'; and in the same street is a branch establishment of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and another of the 'Western Bank of Scotland.'

Dumbarton was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II, in the year 1221; and its privileges (including the right of fishing in the Leven) were confirmed by a charter from James VI, in 1609. The municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and ten councillors. The sheriff ordinary court and the commissary court are held every Thursday during session, the sheriff small debt court every alternate Thursday, and the burgh court sits (if necessary) on Mondays and Wednesdays during session. The burgh unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock and Port Glasgow in returning one member to parliament. The County and Burgh Buildings were completed in 1825, at an expense exceeding £5,000; they form a noble structure, and contain convenient court-rooms, with every suitable office, and a handsome assembly-room; the gaol is placed at the rear of the court-house.

At the east end of the High-street stands the parish church, a handsome edifice, with a fine spire and clock; the erection was perfected in 1811, at a cost of £6,000. The other places of worship are a free church, two united presbyterian chapel, one for Roman Catholics, and a baptist meeting-house. All that now remains of the ancient collegiate church, founded in 1450, by Isabella, Dutches of Alban, and Countess of Lennox, and dedicated to Saint Patrick, is one of the tower arches which has been removed and placed at the entrance of the Burgh school, in Church-street, the original site being required for the formation of the Dumbartonshire railway, which passes in the immediate vicinity of this once extensive pile. The principal educational establishment is the Burgh Grammar School—a truly eminent institution of long standing. There are some other well conducted instructional foundations in the town, including a free church school, and some private day schools. The first number of the 'Dumbarton Herald', a weekly newspaper of considerable merit, was published on the 25th September last by the enterprising proprietor Mr. Samuel Bennett. The inhabitants support a good subscription library, and a respectable news and reading room. The markets, entitled to be held on Tuesdays and Fridays, are now but thinly attended: the fairs are of much greater importance; they are held on the third Tuesday of March, the Thursday next before Easter, the third Tuesday in May, and the second Tuesday in August, besides a very large cattle fair held on Carman moor on the first Wednesday in June.

CARDROSS is a small but respectable village in the parish of its name, situate four miles from Dumbarton on the road to Helensburgh, and near the shore of the Clyde. Prior to the reformation, the church of Cardross was a rectory, belonging to the cathedral of Glasgow, and was seated on a peninsular promontory formed by the Leven and the Clyde; the present church, which stands in the village, is a neat edifice with a square tower. This district is very populous and the situation of the parish eligible for business, pleasant and salubrious. The vicinage of the village is the residence of many respectable families, whose tasteful mansions embellish the surrounding scenery.

HELENSBURGH, with ROW AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HELENSBURGH is a modern town, burgh of barony, and sea-port, in the parish of Row; 23 miles w. N. w. from Glasgow, 9 s. from Luss, and 8 N. w. from Dumbarton; lying on the Firth of Clyde, opposite to Greenock, from which it is five miles distant. The town which is a perpetual feu from Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, was commenced in 1777; and since that period it has risen into notice as the most convenient and agreeable sea-bathing place on the Clyde: it now consists of a series of hand-ome houses and streets, laid out on a neat and approved plan. The accommodations for visitors are equal to those of most bathing places: numerous private houses are well furnished for the reception of families or individuals resorting hither in the summer; and there are two superior hotels, hot, cold and shower baths, a public library, &c. The quay, erected in 1817, extends from the centre of the town a considerable distance into the river; but, being low, a great portion of it is covered at high water; improvements are in contemplation, however which, when effected, will obviate this inconvenience. About a mile and a half west of the town, at the entrance of the Gare loch, an excellent and substantial new quay has been constructed by Sir Jas. Colquhoun. Helensburgh was elevated to the rank of a burgh of barony in 1802; its municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies and four of the town council.

The places of worship are the parish church at Row, two miles west of the town, and one under the establishment in Clyde street, Episcopal and free churches and chapels for united pre-byterians, independents and baptists. A parochial school, and two or three respectable boarding academies, are amongst the educational establishments in the town and parish.

At the distance of two miles, in a westerly direction, is Roseneath Castle, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Argyll; this noble edifice stands on the opposite side of Loch Gare, and is well worth the stranger's notice. Opposite Roseneath, on the north-west bank of the loch, is situate Ardencaple Castle, the residence of the Dowager Dutchess of Argyll, commanding a fine view of the Clyde and Gare Loch, which flows between these splendid mansions to a distance of seven miles into the main land; and in the vicinity of the town, especially at its eastern end, near the banks of the Clyde, are several handsome seats and residences. In the immediate neighbourhood of Helensburgh resided for twenty-five years the celebrated and scientific Henry Bell, to whose fertile and persevering genius Europe is indebted for the first successful application of steam to the propelling of vessels; and the first trip ever made by steam-boat, in this division of the globe, was from Port Glasgow to Helensburgh, by the Comet, in the year 1812. Mr. Bell was a millwright and engineer, he was born in the parish of Torphichen, county of Linlithgow April 7th, 1767—died at his house (the Baths Inn), in Helensburgh, November 14th, 1830—and was interred in the parish church-yard of Row without a memorial commemorative of the inestimable benefits conferred by him upon his species, by rendering subservient to the use of man that stupendous power which now successfully 'combats the fickle wind and stems the flowing tide'. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February for horses, and on the second Wednesday in November for cattle; the fairs formerly held on the 1st of June and 6th of August are discontinued, though authorized by charter.

The parish of Row, to which the above town of Helensburgh belongs, is chiefly of a hilly and pastoral character; the low grounds are adjacent to the Clyde, and are fertile and beautiful. The parish church stands near the ferry across Gare loch to the peninsula of Roseneath; opposite it is a point projecting into the loch, and it is supposed that from this circumstance the name of the parish is derived—the word row signifying a point. The parish (exclusive of a narrow stripe on Loch Long), is about ten miles in length by four in breadth; bounded by Luss on the east, Cardross on the south-east, on the west by Gare Loch and Loch Long, and its south end is washed by the Firth of Clyde.

KILPATRICK, DUNTOCHER AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILPATRICK is a post village in the parish of its name, 53 miles W. from Edinburgh, 10 W. from Glasgow, and 5 E. from Dumbarton; situated on the road between the two last-named towns, and occupying a pleasant site at the foot of a hilly country, in view of the Clyde. The name Kilpatrick signifies the 'church of Patrick,' but in this instance tradition varies from fact—the former authority stating it to be the 'cell,' while the latter proves the definition just given to be proper, for Patrick never was an anchorite; it is generally supposed, however, that this parish was the birth-place of the celebrated titular saint of Ireland: the traditional record asserts that, at the age of sixteen, this individual was carried off from this then civilized Roman district by a band of Irish marauders who made a descent upon this part of the coast, and with other captives subjected to slavery in their own comparatively barbarous country; but the 'Ecclesia Hibernica' distinctly states that he voluntarily landed on the northern shore of Ireland in the year 461, after a residence of twenty-six years in the Roman capital: the visit strengthened the connexion that had priorly existed between the two nations. Within its limited locality the village has not the advantage of any manufactory; but at Dalmuir, one mile and a half eastward, is an extensive paper mill, and another for crushing or chipping dye-woods; on the banks of the Clyde are large chymical works; at LITTLE MILL, a mile to the west, is a distillery and a ship-building yard; and situated on a declivity, commanding an extensive and beautiful view of the Clyde and adjacent country, is Milton house and print works, the residence and property of Messrs. Muter and Millar.

At the entrance of the village from Dumbarton stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice, surmounted by a handsome square tower and clock, erected in 1812. At the east end of the village is a free church and an united presbyterian chapel, together with a parochial school. At Douglass, a mile and a half to the west, are to be seen the ruins of an old fortification or Roman boundary, and at Bowling-bay, about midway between Douglass and Kilpatrick, commences the Forth and Clyde canal, which, after thirty-nine miles eastern traverse, empties itself into the Forth at Grangemouth, thus connecting the German ocean with the western channel: this great work was begun in 1768, and opened throughout on the 28th of July, 1790; vessels drawing eight feet water, having a nineteen feet beam and a seventy-three feet keel, can navigate this noble national junction.

DUNTOCHER is a considerable village, until lately forming part of the parish of Kilpatrick, but now a separate ecclesiastical district; it is situated two miles north from Kilpatrick, and contains four large mills for spinning and manufacturing cotton, together with coal and lime works—all called into operation by the spirit and enterprise of the late William Dunn, Esq. of Duntocher, and still kept in active operation by Alexander Dunn, Esq. of Duntocher, under the supervision of Mr. John Macindoe; there is also a manufactory for spades and shovels. The principal part of the town, (for its size and population entitle it to the rank), which belongs to Mr. Dunn, is lighted with gas, from works established by that gentleman, who is the largest heritor in the parish. The church of the new parish was erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,700; the other places of worship are a free church and two united presbyterian chapels. Perhaps the most ancient bridge in Scotland exists here; a stone near to it bears the following inscription:—

'FONTEM. HUNC. EXIT.
RUI. CURAVIT. IMP. T.
ÆL. ANTONIN. HADR.
AUG. P. P. QUINT. LOLL.
URBIC. LEG. FERÆ. COL.
LAPSUM. RESTITUIT.
DOMINUS DE BLANT-
M.D.CC.LXXII.'

which is thus translated—'This bridge was built under the auspices of the Emperor Titus Ælius Antoninus Hadrianus Augustus, father of his country, by Quintus Lollius Urbicus, his lieutenant; being almost ruinous, it was restored by Lord Blantyre in the year 1772. A little above the bridge there was a fort and watch-tower visible when Pennant visited this quarter in 1772, but no vestige of them now remains.

KIRKINTILLOCH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KIRKINTILLOCH (or Kirkintulloch) is an ancient and thriving manufacturing town, burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name, 40 miles w. from Edinburgh, 20 s. s. w. from Stirling, 16 e. from Dumbarton, the like distance w. from Falkirk, 7 n. from Glasgow, the like distance w. from Cumbernauld, 5 s. w. from Kilsyth, and 3 s. e. from Campsie. It is situated on the water of Luggie, near to its junction with the Kelvin; and is understood to derive its name from the locality, the original designation being Caer-pen-tulloch, signifying, in Cambro-British, the fort on the head or end of a hill, which is descriptive of the site of the town, standing as it does on the verge of a ridge, advancing from the south into a plain on the bank of the Kelvin. The wall of Antoninus passed through this town, and one of his principal forts stood on the summit of a hill, a little south-west of the parish church; the site of the fortress is even to this day recognised by a deep moat called 'Peel.' Kirkintilloch (which is the largest parish in the shire), and the neighbouring parish of Cumbernauld are separated from the rest of the county by the north point of Lanarkshire, and are surrounded by that county and Stirlingshire. The weaving of lappet muslin is carried on here to a great extent by the hand-loom, in which the majority of the inhabitants are employed. There are also hats, locks, &c. made here for the Glasgow market: print and bleach works, an iron foundry, and several manufactories are in the neighbourhood. The monetary transactions of the burgh are facilitated by a branch of the Western Bank of Scotland, and there is also a branch of the City of Glasgow Savings' Bank.

Few places possess more eligible advantages for inland conveyance than this; that great undertaking the Forth and Clyde canal passing through the town, affords a speedy and certain transit to the east or west coasts of Scotland. The Monkland and Kirkintilloch railway, opened in the spring of 1826, and which extends to Airdrie, joining the Ballochnie railway about a mile from that town, is within six miles: this line also joins the Gannirk and Glasgow railway. In 1835 about 40,000 tons of coal, and 3,325 tons of pig iron were shipped on the canal from this railway, besides the consumption of the neighbourhood, which amounts to about 16,000 tons of coal from the railway alone. The Edinburgh and Glasgow line passes over the Monkland and Kirkintilloch, a mile and a half south of the town, and at this place is known as the 'Campsie Junction.' Kirkintilloch is a free burgh of barony; its first charter was conferred by William the Lion, dated at Forres; it was granted to William Cumming, of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, and was subsequently confirmed and its privileges enlarged. The town is governed by two bailies and twelve councillors, elected by the burghesses, about thirty-three in number. The bailies possess the power of deciding in all causes within the liberty of the burgh, equal to the right exercised by sheriffs of counties. The town has a police establishment, under the regulation of commissioners appointed by the provisions of the local act of parliament for the government of small towns. Gas works have been erected by the commissioners for lighting the town. The court-house and jail, which form a substantial building, at the cross, is ornamented with a fine spire containing a clock. A justice of peace court is held once a month—on Saturday; and a burgh court every Saturday.

The parish church, which was built in 1644, and is in the form of a cross, stands near the centre of the town. The other places of worship comprise a new free church, a chapel of ease, erected by subscription in 1837, an original burgher chapel, an united presbyterian chapel, and a methodist meeting-house. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, the last Thursday in July (old style), both for cattle; and October 20th for cattle and horses.

POST OFFICE, LEADGATE, John Young, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from GLASGOW) every morning at eight, and evening at five, and are despatched thereto at eight in the morning, and six in the evening.

LUSS, ARROCHAR, TARBERT & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LUSS is a small romantic village in the parish of its name, 72 miles W. N. W. from Edinburgh, 28 N. W. from Glasgow, 31 S. E. from Inveraray, 13 N. N. W. from Dumbarton, 10 N. N. W. from Bonhill, and 9 N. from Helensburgh; most delightfully situated on the western margin of the justly-famed Loch Lomond. A cotton manufactory formerly flourished here, which has been discontinued, and the building was accidentally destroyed by fire previous to 1836. The only business of consequence at present is the Canstradden and Luss slate quarries, from which considerable quantities of excellent blue slate are obtained, and conveyed to distant parts of the country, by means of small sailing vessels on Loch Lomond and down the river Leven.
The parish school is an excellently conducted institution. If healthfulness of situation and beauty of scenery be desirable, few places possess equal advantages with Luss; but that which renders it a place of paramount interest is the noble Loch, on the margin of whose pellucid waters it reposes, surrounded by some of the most inviting and delightful scenery in Scotland. In summer, the numerous pleasure parties crowding here, impart a gaiety of appearance to the lake, which, if possible, heightens the interest of this charming spot. Steam boats sail every day (Sunday excepted) from the south end of the loch, calling at Luss, Tarbert, Inversnaid, the foot of Ben Lomond, &c. returning the same afternoon. Small boats can be hired by pleasure parties, who are desirous of visiting any of the adjacent shores, and the Royal Oak Hotel is a most agreeable and comfortable inn for those who wish to remain a few days at Luss. Here resided the Rev. and learned Dr. Stuart, who translated the Bible into the Gaelic language; and on the opposite side of the loch, near Drymen, lived for considerable time, Lord Napier, the inventor of logarithms. A fine view of Loch Lomond, with its numerous islands, is obtained from Stronehill, a considerable elevation about half a mile north of the inn. About 2½ miles south from Luss is Rossha House, the seat of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart. of Luss; it is a handsome building, with a fine portico, seated on a low point of land, surrounded on three sides by Loch Lomond. The church was dedicated to St. Macke-sog, a native of Lennox, who was a bishop and confessor, and suffered martyrdom about the year 520, at a place below Luss, on the side of the lake, where a large cairn of stones was raised to his memory. He was buried in the parish church, and was long regarded as the tutelal saint of this part of the country

ARROCHAR (more properly Arroquhar) is a parish lying between Loch Lomond and Loch Long, bounded on the south by Luss. It extends nearly sixteen miles in length by three in breadth. The village, which is situate at the head of Loch Long, is ten miles north from Luss, and about two west from Tarbert: it contains a good inn, well known to travellers in this mountainous and romantic district.

TARBERT or Tarbet is a much-famed inn and small village, on Loch Lomond, about eight miles north from Luss, and to distinguish it from Tarbert, on Loch Fine, in Argyleshire, is generally designated Tarbert on Loch Lomond. This place, which is much visited by tourists, is considered the most pleasing and romantic spot on Loch Lomond, and Ben Arthur, or 'the Cobbler,' is best seen near to the inn. The distance between Loch Lomond and Loch Long is here about two miles, and the arrangements for conveyance in summer are such, that a person may leave Glasgow, about six in the morning, sail to Little Mill, proceed by rail to Balloch, embark in the Loch Lomond steamer, and sail to Tarbert, walk or ride across the isthmus to Arrochar, where a steamer is ready to start again for Glasgow, down Loch Long and up the Clyde; or if inclined to take a tour among the scenery of the west, a coach is ready to start from Tarbert Inn, when the Loch Lomond steamer arrives, which goes through Arrochar and Glencroe, to Cairndow, on Loch Fine, where a steamer waits to forward passengers to Inveraray.

NEW KILPATRICK, MILNGAVIE & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW (or EAST) KILPATRICK is a parish partly in from Duntocher, 21 s.w. from Stirling, 7 n.w. from Glasgow, 51 w. from Edinburgh, and 2 miles from New Kilpatrick. In the village is an extensive mill for cotton spinning, and large print-work establishments; and in the neighbourhood are several bleach fields, print-works, and a distillery. There is an united presbyterian church and a chapel of ease, the parish church is two miles to the south. The country around is finely diversified with hill and dale, and ornamented with many respectable family mansions. At Mugdock Castle, 2½ miles north, is a remarkable echo: also a small beautiful loch, on the margin of which is an eminence, crowned with an observatory. There is a druidical temple about 3 miles n.e., on Craigmaddie moor, near the remains of Craigmaddie Castle, called the 'Old Wife's Lifts'; it consists of three immense stones, two of which are erect and support the third.

MILNGAVIE (popularly Millguy) is a thriving manufacturing village, and the principal one in the parish of New Kilpatrick, but locally situated on the border of Stirling county, 12 miles e. from Dumbarton, 5 e.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.

THIS is a large and important shire, in the south of Scotland; bounded on the east by the counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk; on the north-west by Ayrshire; on the south-west by the stewartry (or county) of Kirkcudbright; on the north by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and part of Selkirk; its south and south-eastern boundary is washed by the Solway Frith, and its south-eastern base is skirted by Roxburghshire and the English county of Cumberland. The length of the county, from north-west to south-east, is nearly fifty-five miles; and its extreme breadth, from the south to where it touches Peeblesshire on the north, is nearly thirty miles. According to the latest and best surveys, it embraces an area of one thousand, two hundred and twenty-eight square miles, or seven hundred and eighty-five thousand, nine hundred and twenty statute acres of land, and about ten square miles of lakes.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion under Agricola, in the year 80, this part of Scotland was inhabited by a race called the Selgovæ, who spread themselves as far as the banks of the Dee, in Galloway: these people continued independent till the year 875, when they were overpowered by the Northumbrian Saxons, who retained the ascendancy for two centuries; during the lapse of this time, however, immense swarms of adventurers from Ireland and Cantyre effected a settlement; and from these intermixtures sprung the Picts, who progressively acquired the paramount sway. At this period Dumfries-shire is understood to have formed part of Cumbria, which district Edgar bequeathed to his youngest brother David, who encouraged the cupidity of many opulent Anglo-Norman barons, and the country was then divided into extensive baronies. The almost interminable border warfare was a frightful calamity to the inhabitants of Dumfries-shire and Cumberland, who for centuries were subjected to all the horrors attendant upon barbarous incursion and reckless feudal hostility. When the civil war broke out under Charles I, the common people entered heartily into the covenant, and the shire was disturbed by the exertions made by the loyal noblemen and gentlemen in quelling the insurrections. Attachment to the house of Stuart ruined several of the great families; and humbler causes have conspired to extinguish many names of great local interest. The Maxwells were completely ruined by the attainder of the Earl of Nithsdale in 1715. The Douglasses of Queensberry, and the Johnstons of Annandale, have merged in other families, and out of the general wreck the noble house of Buccleuch has risen to the greatest prosperity and influence of any family in the south of Scotland. From being thus so frequently subjected to the horrors of early invasion and predatory warfare, and being so partitioned into baronies, the shire exhibits, even to this day, the remains of some very important castles and places of security.

SOIL AND SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The lower parts of Dumfries-shire are based with brown, red, yellow, or white sandstone, which dips generally to the Solway; a considerable body of limestone also lies in this quarter, and beds of ironstone are occasionally found to accompany the other strata. Coal prevails in great plenty in the upper portions of Nithsdale and lower parts of Eskdale, the two extreme points of the county. The limestone of the shire has been of great value in improving the lands; marl likewise abounds in various tracts, and of freestone and whinstone there is a sufficiency in all directions: marble is also procured for different useful and ornamental purposes; and near the northern confines of the county, at Wanlock head, there are inexhaustible mines of lead. As in most districts of the south of Scotland, there is a very general mixture of arable and pasture land. The upper part of the shire, or Annandale, Eskdale, and Ewesdale, is principally devoted to sheep-feeding in the lower portion the farms are larger, and more adapted to agriculture; the plantations and pleasure grounds are consequently more numerous, and are remarkable for their beauty and richness. The following are the principal eminences in Dumfries-shire, with their altitude above the level of the sea:—

In Annandale the improvement of the breed of cattle has been most apparent; at the Highland Society's meetings some of the choicest specimens of the pure breed of Galloway cows, heifers, and bullocks are exhibited. The number of oxen, sheep, and pigs nurtured in this county are invariably more than adequate to the demands of its population; an exportation, therefore, of the excess product takes place—and the same may be observed of corn, wool, hides, and skins. The condition of the county is represented as having been greatly improved within the last forty years, and at present its affairs may be considered in as prosperous state as those of any other district of Scotland. Dumfries-shire cannot be ranked as a manufacturing county: the principal branches under this head are the manufacture of hosiery goods and cotton spinning; the chief seat of the former is limited to the capital of the county—the latter to the town of Annan.

RIVERS, &c.—The chief, indeed the only rivers of consequence, are the Nith, the Annan, and the Esk: from these streams the principal divisions of the county obtain their names; from each of these greater divisions diverge vales, which likewise have denominations taken from the waters that are poured through them, such as Moffatdale, Dryfesdale, and Ewesdale. The Nith rises in the eastern hills of Ayrshire, enters Nithsdale by the foot of Carsoncone hill, in the parish of Kirkconnel, and descends into the valley of Sanquhar; having forced its way through the hills which surround this valley, it receives the Crawick water from the north, and the Euchar from the south. The river Cairn, which forms the western boundary of the county, unites its stream with the Nith a little above Dumfries, a short distance southward from which the latter river empties itself into the Solway Frith. Near to Jarborough castle, on the banks of the river Cairn, are to be seen those earthen mounds, called 'Bow-butts,' where the barons of Glencairn, with their vassals, used to practice archery. The river

Annan (as well as the Tweed and Clyde), takes its rise in the mountains above Moffat, and runs through the flat part of Annandale for upwards of twenty-three miles; in this course it receives the Evan and Moffat waters, and the Wamphray stream; which irrigates a pleasant valley of that name: passing Johnstone, some other tributary rivulets increase its volume; at Loch Mavon it is enlarged by the Ae, and a little lower by the Dryfe, which courses through the vale of Dryfesdale, considered the termination of the vale of Annan. The higher part of Eskdale, for nearly twenty miles, is mountainous: the Esk, in its progress through this district, is joined by the Black Esk, the Meggot, the Eves, and the Wauchope—(almost the whole of this division belongs to the noble family of Buccleuch): after reaching Broomholm, the river traverses a flat country, and a part of Cumberland, before it reaches the Solway Frith; during this portion of its course it receives the Liddal from Roxburghshire, and the Line water from the county of Cumberland: the entire length of its race is about thirty-eight miles, thirty of which are in the shire of Dumfries. The Solway differs very materially from other estuaries receiving in Scotland the appellation of 'Firths': its waters are shallow, and have long sandy reaches at the ebbing of the tide. The ebbs and flows of the Solway are proverbial for the rapidity of their action, and this is particularly the case during spring tides and the prevalence of gales from the south-west: the borderers, though well mounted, have, in numerous melancholy instances, been overwhelmed and drowned, when returning from the Cumberland fairs, in crossing the bed of this estuary—even the most experienced persons are liable to be overtaken by the tides, when they have the best expectation of fording it in safety: on one occasion, within these few years, a gentleman who had been thus engulfed was preserved by the sagacity and courage of his horse, which swam with him right across the Firth. The principal lines of RAILWAY now in operation, are, the 'Glasgow and South-Western,' and the 'Caledonian.' The first named includes in its route, the towns of Dumfries, Annan, Closeburn, Sanquhar and Thornhill. The Caledonian goes to Gretna, Cummertrees, Lockerbie, Moffat and within a mile of Ecclefechan.

DIVISIONS and REPRESENTATION.—The whole county is now popularly apportioned into three districts, namely—ESKDALE on the east, ANNANDALE in the middle, and NITHSDALE on the west. It is ascertained that Dumfries-shire was placed under the government of a sheriff in the thirteenth century, at which period it included the stewartry of Kirkcudbright; the district of Annandale, however, continued to be a stewartry from the period when it merged in the Crown, by the accession of Bruce, till the abolition of the heritable jurisdictions. Up to the era of the reformation, Dumfries-shire formed part of the extensive diocese of Glasgow, and was divided into the two deaneries of Nithsdale and Annandale; it now possesses forty-three parishes, which are divided into five presbyteries and one synod. There are four royal burghs in the county,—Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar, and Lochmaben; and six burghs of barony—Moffat, Lockerby, Langholm, Ecclefechan, Thornhill, and Minniehew. The shire at large sends one member to parliament, and the royal burghs before named join with Kirkcudbright in returning another representative.

ANNAN AND BRIDE-KIRK.

ANNAN the capital of the district of Annandale and of its parish, is an ancient royal burgh, 79 miles s. of Edinburgh, 87 s.e. of Glasgow, 4½ n.e. of Kirkcudbright, 27 s. of Moffat, 16 s. e. of Dumfries, and 6 from Ecclefechan; situated on the east or left bank of the river Annan, rather more than a mile above its influx into the Solway Frith; and upon the Carlisle, Dumfries and South Western railway, for which line there is a station here. The name is derived from that of the river, whose appellation is traced to the Celtic An, signifying simply water. It is a town of considerable antiquity, and is one of the most ancient burghs in Scotland. Annan was a Roman station, and the Verumum of the geography of Ravenna. It seems to have been held by the Britons after the departure of the Romans, till they were subdued by the Saxons of Northumbrian kingdom, when it came to the Scotch. It afterwards became a principal port, and was granted, with the territory of Annandale and the port of Lochmaben, to the ancestors of Robert Bruce, by some of whom a castle was erected, which was once occupied as a church, but afterwards went to ruins, and the original wall now forms part of the gaol and town hall. Upon the death of David II., in 1371, this castle, Lochmaben, and the lordship of Annandale, came to Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, and went, with his sister Agnes, to the Danburs, Earls of March; after their forfeiture it went to the Douglasses, who lost it by similar conduct, and then, having come to Alexander, Duke of Albany, he, for rebelling against his brother, King James III., and plundering the fair of Lochmaben, in 1484, also forfeited it. Since that period it continued in the hands of the king, and became the great key of the western border. By the accession of the Bruce family to the throne, it became a royal burgh. The existing charter was granted by James VI. of Scotland, and is dated July 10th, 1612; it confirms previous charters, and particularly recites one conferred by James V., dated 1st March, 1538, which had with others been burned and destroyed by sieges and the inroads of the English, particularly in 1298, when they entered Annandale, and burnt the town with its church. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies and fifteen councillors, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and a town clerk. It unites with Dumfries, Sanguhar, Lochmaben and Kirkcudbright, in returning one member to parliament.

The port or harbour of Annan is free, and vessels of two hundred and fifty tons can come within half a mile of the town, but vessels of much larger burthen can enter the river at its confluence with the Solway, distant little more than a mile from the town; at this place two new wooden wharfs or jetties have recently been erected by rival steam boat companies, whose vessels generally make the passage between Annan and Liverpool within twelve hours, that is, in one tide.

POST OFFICE, High-street, ANNAN, George Pool, Post Master.—Letters from CARLISLE and the SOUTH, arrive every morning at a quarter past nine, and are despatched at half-past three in the afternoon, and six in the evening.

CAERLAVEROCK PARISH,

INCLUDING THE VILLAGES OF BANK-END, KELTON, GLENCAPLE-QUAY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of CAERLAVEROCK occupies a sort of Peninsula, formed by the Solway Firth, the river Nith, and Lochan water. The magnificent ruin of Caer-laverock castle, stands on a level plain, between 8 and 9 miles from Dumfries. It is an ancient possession of the Maxwells, once a powerful family in this part of Scotland, and wardens of the western marches. It was besieged and captured by Edward I., in 1300, and by Cromwell in 1651. After this it ceased to be a tenable fortress, and fell into decay: it now presents a ruin massive and picturesque, eminently worthy the notice of the tourist. This ancient fortalice was the scene of a foul and remarkable murder, about the middle of the fourteenth century, which has furnished the theme of a very beautiful ballad by K. Sharpe, Esq., published in the 'minstrelsy of the Scottish border.'

The tragical event was connected with the assassination of the Red Cumine (a powerful chieftain, who formerly held the regency of Scotland), by Robert Bruce, attended by Kirkpatrick and Lindsay, two of his adherents.

BANK-END is a clean, pleasant village, about 7 miles from Dumfries, containing the parochial and grammar school, which is also a boarding academy.

CLOSEBURN, GLENCAIRN, DUNBEGGAN, MINNIEHIVE, KEIR, KIRKMICHAEL AND TYNRON.

CLOSEBURN is an inland parish in the district of Nithsdale; it has incorporated with it the parish of Dalgarno, and is about ten miles in length, by about eleven and a half in breadth. The annual produce of the parish amounts to £40,300, of which £3,500 arises from the sale of lime only. The ruins of the ancient Castle of Closeburn, the property of Sir James Stewart Monteath, Bart., forms an interesting object in the scenery here, which derives additional beauty from some romantic waterfalls, within two miles of the castle, and some caverns, in one of which latter the hunted covenanted used to take up their abode, to evade pursuit: it is considered to be the place alluded to by the author of 'Waverley,' in his description of the cave occupied by Balfour of Burley. A school was most amply endowed in 1723, by one John Wallace, a native of the parish; it is placed under the government of the presbytery of Penpont, and in it all the children of the parish are taught the elements of education, free of expense.

The parish of GLENCAIRN is also in Nithsdale, and extends eleven miles in length, by from three to five in breadth. Several small rivulets meander beautifully through it, enriching the scenery, to which the elegant mansion and grounds of H. Ferguson, Esq. contribute greatly. On the south-west verge of the parish is Loch Urr, whence issues the river of that name. A new church has been erected a short distance from the site of the old edifice.

DUNBEGGAN is a small well-built village, in the parish of Glencairn, five miles and a half south-east of Penpont, situated on the north bank of the Dalwhat water, where it is crossed by a bridge to MINNIEHIVE,

CUMMERTREES, POWFOOT, DALTON, MOUSWALD, RUTHWELL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMMERTREES is a parish and village—the latter clean and neat, is 84 miles S. of Edinburgh, the same distance S. E. of Glasgow, 22 N. W. of Carlisle, 13 S. E. of Dumfries, 10 S. E. of Lochmaben, the same distance S. from Lockerbie, 6 from Ecclefechan, and 4 from Annan, situated on the Caledonian Railway, for which line there is a station at the village. The parish, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, is bounded on the north-east by the river Annan, and on the south by the Solway Frith. It is a flat, fertile, and well cultivated district, and is now well enclosed. The name is derived from the British words Cum-ber-tree, signifying the hamlet at the short valley, and is sufficiently descriptive of the local situation of the village—About a mile south-east of Cummertrees is POWFOOT, a fishing hamlet, situated on the shore of the Solway.

DALTON is a small village between three and four miles from Cummertrees. The parish of which now comprehends the two ancient ones of Melkie Dalton and Little Dalton, is four miles in length by three in breadth. Its general appearance is that of high cultivation, which has been extended over once unprofitable moors and commons. The village contains the kirk and parochial school, together with a female day and Sunday school.

MOUSWALD village stands six miles from Dumfries, lying between that town and Annan. The kirk, which is about a quarter of a mile from the village, on an elevated site, contains a dilapidated effigy of Sir Simon Carruthers, since laird of Mouswald. Sir Richard Grierson, Baronet, of Lagg, has a mansion in the parish.

RUTHWELL is a village about three miles from Cummertrees; this place is a barony, and is privileged to hold markets and fairs, but it is long since the inhabitants have aided themselves of these rights. It was in early days celebrated for the manufacture of salt; but this art has not been practised for some time. Near the shore is the Brow well and hamlet, where Burns spent several of the last weeks of his existence. The kirk and manse of Ruthwell stand about a quarter of a mile from that village. The gardens of the manse, which are extensive and laid out with great taste, contain a very ancient Runic monument, in a good state of preservation. The parochial school is at Clarencefield.

About a mile from Ruthwell, in the parish of Mouswald, is mount Kedar, where a monument has been erected to the memory of the Rev. Henry Duncan, D.D. late minister of Ruthwell. The memorial which is of stone, consists of an arched base and pyramid forty feet in height; on the base an inscription states that he was the founder of the system of savings' banks and was born in 1774, and died in 1846, after being minister of Ruthwell parish forty-four years, when he closed in communion with the free church of Scotland. A free church and school-house have been erected here.

DORNOCK, GRAITNEY (OR GRETN),

WITH SPRINGFIELD, KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DORNOCK is a parish and village—the latter a small one, is 84 miles s. of Edinburgh, 18 s. of Langholm, 17 s.e. of Dumfries, 12 s.e. of Lockerbie, 7 s. of Ecclefechan, and 2 e. of Annan; situated on the high road from the latter town to Carlisle, and about a quarter of a mile from the shore of the Solway Frith, where there is good sea-bathing. The parish, which is about two miles and a half square, is washed on its southern part by the Solway. An ancient erection, called Stapleton tower, stands on the estate of Stapleton, in this parish; as is Robgill tower, formerly belonging to the Irvings, of Robgill. The Duke of Buccleuch and the Earl of Mansfield are the principal owners of the land, which for the most part is in a high state of cultivation. The kirk and the parochial school, are in the village

GRAITNEY (more popularly called Gretna) is a parish in the south part of the county, lying on the west side of the small river Sark. The present parish comprehends the old parishes of Gretna and Redkirk, which were united in 1609. The village of Gretna, or Gretna-Green, is situated on the road from Annan to Carlisle, by Longton—eight miles and a half from the former, nine miles and a half from the latter town; and is the first stage on entering Scotland from England. The Caledonian railway passes through the parish, and there is a station contiguous to the villa. This place has long been noted for the celebration of clandestine marriages: any person can perform the ceremony, which merely amounts to a declaration, before witnesses, that the parties are man and wife—such an acknowledgment being sufficient to constitute a valid marriage in Scotland; by a certificate being sub-cribed by the officiating priest and witnesses, the union becomes quite indissoluble. The fee charged varies according to circumstances, and the means of the party—from half a guinea to £40, and even £50 has been paid. Recently bills were brought into the House of Lords to alter the law of Scottish marriage, and more especially the Gretna Green contracts, but they were not carried. The first of these 'convenient priests' was a fisherman named Coulthard; he kept a ferryboat before any high roads were made through the country; after him a farmer, named Peter Graham, succeeded to the office; the next was Joseph Paisley; the present marriage functionary is Mr. John Linton, of Gretna Hall, an innkeeper. The following is the form of the marriage certificate, which, if required, is furnished:—

PARISH OF GRETN.

“These are to certify to all to whom these presents may come, that A. B. from the parish of —, in the county of —, and C. D. from the parish of —, in the county of —, being now here present, and having declared themselves single persons, were this day married agreeable to the laws of Scotland.

AS WITNESS our hands at Gretna Hall,” &c. &c.

About a quarter of a mile from Gretna is the village of SPRINGFIELD, which participates in this matrimonial trade; this village is held on long lease from Sir J. H. Maxwell; that of Gretna belongs to Colonel William Maxwell. At SARKFOOT, about a mile from the latter village, is good bathing ground. About two miles west from Gretna is the small village of Rigo, where there is a dissenting chapel.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, interesting in Scottish legend and song, is bounded on the east by Graitney; the kirk and parochial school, which stand at the southern end of the parish, are about three miles from Gretna. Lime and freestone abound in this district, in which are likewise several mineral springs, possessing medicinal properties similar to those of Hartfield spa, near Moffat.

DUMFRIES, MAXWELLTOWN & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMFRIES, the capital of its county and parish, a royal burgh, the seat of the synod and presbytery of Dumfries, is 338 miles from London (by the route of Manchester), 71 s. of Edinburgh, 72 s.e. of Glasgow, 180 s. by w. of Aberdeen, 60 s. e. of Ayr, 33 n. w. of Carlisle, (by railway), 15 n.w. of Annan, and 8 s. w. of Lochmaben : it is situated on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and there is a station for the line about a quarter of a mile from the town. Dumfries, which may be considered as the metropolis of the south-west quarter of Scotland, is seated on the left bank of the river Nith, about nine miles above its confluence with the Solway Frith, and navigable for vessels of light tonnage, the tide flowing as high as the old bridge. There exists no record whereby to ascertain the date when the town was founded, or the etymology of its name Drium-a-frish—Dun-fries—Drum-fries and 'Dumfries' have successively been its appellations—Dun a castle, and fries shrubs, is a plausible compound for the original name. The site of this queen of Nithdale is singularly picturesque, stretching along the banks of the Nith at an elevation sufficient to command a rich prospect terminating at the distance of a few miles in a chain of lofty hills, either cultivated or umbrageous to their summits. There are no many attractions in and around Dumfries that the gentry of the neighbouring counties resort to it, imparting vivacity and all the delights of good society.

Amongst the improvements of modern times may be named the erection of a suite of assembly-rooms, new market-places, the widening of Bank-street, and lighting the town with gas ; a spacious quay has been constructed along the side of the town ; and a fine Doric column, raised by the county of Dumfries to the memory of Charles Duke of Queensberry who died in 1778, adorns the centre of the burgh. The Court-House is a large elegant edifice, comprising a very capacious court-room and other offices ; nearly opposite stands the gaol, whence the prisoners are conveyed for trial through a subterraneous passage which communicates with the court-room. Circuit courts of Justiciary are held in April and September for Dumfries-shire and the stewardry of Kirkcudbright ; there are also ordinary and small debt, sheriff's and Justiciary burgh courts. The station of the Glasgow and South-Western railway is an important erection, giving animation to the south-eastern suburb of the town. The commodious cottages or almshouses, founded by the benevolence of Mrs Carruthers, are an interesting memorial to her philanthropy. The Theatre is rather a handsome building of stone, with a projecting portico ; the interior, which is tastefully decorated is lighted with gas : it is generally open a few weeks in the winter. It was here that Kean first emerged, from obscurity to fame, and he never forgot the early patronage of the denizens of Dumfries.

The trade of Dumfries will be greatly benefited when the projected plans are achieved for confining the current of the river within walled embankments, which will not only deepen the channel but prevent the expansion of the tide, and thereby reclaim large tracts of land from the tidal submerision. The principal imports are timber, hemp, tallow, coals, slate, iron, and wine; the exports consist of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, wool, and freestone. Considerable business is done in the manufacture of hosiery, hat-making, brewing, tanning, and the g'ue manufacture; and on the east bank of the river is a large mill for the manufacture of tweeds and checks, conducted by R. Scott and Sons. Dumfries was for many years the leading market for hare-skins in Scotland, and even regulated the price of home fur in England; and it is still looked to as the arbiter of prices. Several branch banking companies afford facilities to the monetary transactions of the town. The principal Hotels are the 'King's Arms,' and the 'Commercial,' both highly respectable and well-conducted establishments. Three Newspapers issue weekly, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, respectively, their names are the 'Dumfries Courier,' the 'Dumfries and Galloway Standard,' and the 'Dumfries-shire and Galloway Herald.'

The municipal government of the burgh is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, a town-clerk, and nineteen councillors. The craftsmen were formerly divided into seven corporations, with each a deacon chosen from their respective trades, who elected one of their own number to be convener, and another to be general box-master; all of whom formed what was termed a grand committee of the seven trades: these distinctions, however, (for distinctions of considerable importance they were in former times), were virtually abolished by the reform bill; some of the trades possessed considerable property, which has since been publicly sold, and the proceeds equitably divided among the respective parties. Dumfries unites with Annan, Lockmaben, and Sanquhar, in returning one member to parliament. The numerous nursery grounds around the town are both useful and ornamental to the suburbs. The great desideratum of a copious supply of pure water has now been attained, and the inhabitants have an abundance brought from ample sources, about five miles from the town, and as a rate is laid upon all, no housekeeper will hesitate to secure to himself an ample supply.

The places of worship, including Maxwelltown, comprise three churches of the establishment, two of the free church, several united presbyterian and cameronian churches, an episcopal, an independent, a baptist, and a catholic chapel. Saint Michael's, or the mother church, claims peculiar notice on account its cemetery, which contains numberless elegant and curious monuments, many of them very ancient; but the most attractive is the fine mausoleum raised to the memory of the Scottish bard, Burns: the design for the mausoleum was by F. Hunt, Esq., of London; and Turnerelli modelled the sculpture. By the erection of this monument, it may be said that Scotland has repaid the debt so long due to the memory of him of whose natural genius his countrymen may well be proud. Burns died at Dumfries on the 21st July, 1796, aged 37 years, and his remains were deposited in the churchyard of Saint Michael's. This mausoleum and the profusion of funeral sculpture which adorn this cemetery, are so attractive that it is a pity free ingress is not at all times permitted; the fee doubtless prevents many a stranger from inspecting these beautiful memorials to the dead. The tasteful new free church of Saint Mary, on the north side of English-street, is a graceful ornament to this approach to the town, and the cemetery around it is gradually being enriched with finely executed monumental sculpture.

were in Britain; and this is still the only one in the South of Scotland. Medical advice and medicines are gratuitously afforded to every applicant who is an object of charity. It is supported by annual subscriptions, legacies, donations, benefactions, &c., and is under the management of governors. There is also the Crichton Institution for lunatics, a noble foundation upon a lofty site. The Poors' Hospital is for the purpose of supporting aged and indigent poor, and destitute children, who are taught to read and write. It is governed by the magistrates, town council, &c., and is supported by a part of the collections from the church doors, numerous benefactions, donations and annual subscriptions. It was founded in 1753, by Messrs. J. and W. Moorhead, merchants. Dumfries is not behind other towns in its support of numerous religious and educational societies—both an infant and a ragged school are amongst the later institutions.—The Academy. This elegant and useful seminary was founded in 1802: the expenses of the ground, and of building and finishing the fabric, were entirely defrayed by voluntary subscription. In October, 1814, the structure was formally delivered over to the magistrates as patrons and guardians of the institution, who, along with other members of the town council, have the exclusive privilege of appointing the masters. The New Club House, in Assembly-street, was formerly the Old Assembly-rooms. The Exchange-rooms and a Farmers' Club are among the projected novelties. The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Astronomical Society have erected, on Corbely hill, on the Maxwelltown side of the river, an observatory, which is regarded as a highly ornamental feature in one of the most unique half-urban half-sylvan landscapes: and commands an extensive view of beautiful and varied scenery; the cost which exceeded one thousand guineas, was raised in £5 shares. The plans were by Mr. Newall, architect, and the building was completed in little more than twelve months. It contains four stories,—the lower one for the use of the keeper; three others for the accommodation of the subscribers and strangers, which are furnished with globes, mathematical instruments, newspapers and periodicals; and the upper story is set apart for a camera-obscura and prism. The grounds, which consist of more than half an acre, are laid out with much taste, containing flowers and shrubs of various kinds.

The market days are Wednesdays. The two principal half-yearly markets take the name of the Candlemas and roof fairs. Besides the usual commodities that change hands at these periods, many thousand head of black cattle are bought and sold; and vast quantities of pork also find purchasers in Dumfries from the beginning of December to the end of February. The fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in April, the 26th May or the Wednesday after; the third Wednesday in June, the third Wednesday in July, the third Wednesday in August, the third Wednesday in October and the third Wednesday in November, for cattle (all old style).

MAXWELLTOWN, formerly a village, is now a burgh of barony, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and connected with Dumfries by two bridges across the Nith. In no instance have the good effects of erecting a village into a burgh of barony been more conspicuous than in Maxwelltown. The charter was obtained from the crown in 1810, and since that time, from being a poor village, notorious for disorderly conduct,—(for it was a remark of the late Sir John Fielding, that he could trace a rogue over the whole kingdom, but always lost him at the bridge-end of Dumfries, now Maxwelltown, or in the Gorbals of Glasgow),—it has improved in value and extent of houses, and increased considerably in the number and respectability of its inhabitants: it is governed by a provost, two bailies and councillors. Among the trading establishments are a brewery, two foundries and several corn mills. The church here, is handsome and of modern erection.

DUNSCORE, HOLYWOOD AND KIRKMAHOE.

DUNSCORE, a parish in the district of Nithsdale, is bounded by Glencairn and Keir on the north, and Holywood and Kirkcudbrightshire on the south. It is twelve miles in length, and its breadth varies from one to four miles. The land is arable on the banks of the Nith, which irrigates its eastern part; it is also intersected by the Cairn. Sheep and black cattle are reared off these lands, for the southern markets; and oats, barley, wheat, potatoes, and turnips are produced in great quantities. The kirk of the parish is about nine miles from Dumfries, and seven from Minniehwe. Robert Burns, at one time, held a farm in this parish, near the Nith, named Friars' carse; and it was while here that he had an opportunity of eulogizing the Cluden river, which is a continuation of the Cairn water. At this period he took charge of a village library, instituted by his landlord, Robert Riddel, Esq.

HOLYWOOD parish, which is bounded by Dunscore on the north and west, extends for ten miles along the right bank of the Nith, its breadth being from two to three miles. The district derives its name from a sacred grove, to which, it is said, the Druids resorted to perform their rites. The temple of these pagans was succeeded by the cell of a hermit, which was subsequently changed into a house for monks of the premonstratenses, in the beginning of the twelfth century; and the ruins of an old abbey in the churchyard are supposed to be remains of that building. The church, an exceedingly neat erection, and much admired, stands in a most delightful part of the country; about three miles from Dumfries.

KIRKMAHOE is a small modern village in the parish of its name, and district of Nithsdale, five miles from Dumfries, situate on a rivulet, tributary to the Nith, near the southern extremity of the parish. The church is a handsome gothic edifice of recent erection. The lands of the parish are well cultivated, and there are several plantations.

ECCLEFECHAN

WITH THE VILLAGE OF WATERBECK IN MIDDLEBIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ECCLEFECHAN is a considerable village, in the parish of Hoddam, 71 miles s. of Edinburgh, 75 s. e. of Glasgow, 19 n. w. of Carlisle, 16 e. of Dumfries, and 6 n. of Annan: lying in a fine situation, near the foot of Annandale, and on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle, within a mile of the station on the Caledonian Railway. The land of Hoddam parish is of the very best quality, under a superior system of cultivation, and the district is perhaps one of the most healthy and pleasant in the south of Scotland. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving cotton goods for the Carlisle manufacturers, who have constantly a demand for the labours of the loom, and which enables the operatives to enjoy many comforts which they would otherwise be deprived of. Ecclefechan contains many respectable shops, in which a variety of trades is carried on, the prosperity of which is mainly sustained by the extensive cattle markets, for which this village has been so long noted. These great marts are held on the first Fridays after the 11th in the months of January, February, March, April, and July; the Friday before the 26th of August, the 18th of September (or the Friday before), the 26th of October, the Friday after the 11th of November, and the Friday after the 11th of December. The first Friday after the 11th of May and the 26th of October are hiring days for servants, the latter being also a cattle market; and the first Tuesday after the 11th of June is a fair for cattle and general merchandise. On the two fair days in June and October, the Duke of Buccleuch, as superior, claims certain customs for all standings, and for all cattle exposed for sale. Ecclefechan can boast of being the birth-place of two persons of considerable celebrity—namely, the Rev. Edward Irvine, founder of that section of Christians called Irvinites; and Thomas Carlyle, renowned for his quaint but powerful writing.

MIDDLEBIE is a parish lying on the road between Langholm and Ecclefechan: it is about seven miles in length by four in breadth, abounds in red freestone, and is valuable for its lime quarries; but much of the land is of rather poor quality. The village—a small one, is about two miles from Ecclefechan, and about twelve from Langholm.

WATERBECK village, in Middlebie parish, is two miles from thence, on the road to Langholm. It is a pretty little rural place, and has been much improved by the late Mr. Robert Carlyle and his sons.

LANGHOLM,

AND THE PARISHES OF CANONBIE, ESKDALEMUIR, EWES, WESTERKIRK & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANGHOLM is a thriving market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 73 miles s. from Edinburgh, 80 s. w. from Glasgow, 30 e. by n. from Dumfries, the like distance s. e. from Moffat, 21 n. from Carlisle, 18 n. n. e. from Annan, and 12 n. from Longtown (in Cumberland), delightfully situated on the left or east bank of the Esk, over which there is a stone bridge of three arches. This parish and the adjoining ones of Canonbie, Ewes, Westerkirk and Eskdalemuir are known as the 'five kirks of Eskdale.' The town of Langholm owes its origin to a border house or tower, which was formerly the property of the all-powerful Armstrongs, but is now only seen in a state of ruin. Langholm was long famed for an ingeniously formed iron instrument, called the 'branks,' which fitted upon the head of a shrewish female, and, projecting a sharp spike into her mouth, fairly subdued the more annoying weapon within; this instrument was deemed more effectual than the ducking (or cucking) stool, used in some parts of England, as the latter permitted liberty to the unruly member between every dip. The author of the 'Picture of Scotland' says—'Eskdale derives more than common charm from the memory of Johnnie Armstrong, whose name associated with many of its localities; his tower of Gilnockie still stands, though converted into a cow-house, a few miles below Langholm, on the left bank of the Esk. It was on 'Langholm Holm' that, when going to meet the king, he and his 'gallant companies' of thirty-six men 'ran their horse and brak' their spears.' Johnnie terminated his mortal career at Carlenrig, a place not far distant from Moss-Paul, on the road between Langholm and Hawick: the story of the judicial execution of this border-thief and his companions, by James V., is well known; the graves of the whole of the marauding band are to be seen in a deserted church-yard at Carlenrig. In the present day Langholm does not seem to partake of any of the peculiarities which distinguished the country in the 'riding times', or in the ages of superstition, being now one of the most thriving towns of its size in Scotland. It is built in the bosom of a lovely woodland scene, along the Edinburgh and Carlisle road; and is composed generally of good stone houses, roofed with blue slate. The bridge connects the ancient town with a more modern suburb on the opposite side of the river, called New Langholm or New Town. In the market-place of the old town stands the town-hall, jail, and county police station, ornamented with a neat spire and clock. The annually increasing woollen trade more than compensates for the decrease of cotton manufacture, which formerly flourished here. The town contains a number of respectable shops, a branch each of the 'National Bank of Scotland' and the 'British Linen Company', two distilleries, a brewery, dyehouse, tannery, and some excellent inns. The government of the town is vested in a baron baillie, appointed by the Duke of Buccleuch, who is superior. Sheriff's small debt and justice of peace courts are held at stated periods.

The parish church, recently erected, is allowed to be one of the most elegant and substantial in the south of Scotland; the other places of worship are a free church and two united presbyterian chapels. A good parochial school, one endowed by the late Capt. George Maxwell of Broomholm, and one connected with the free church are the institutions for instruction; and there are two extensive well supported libraries, one of which derives considerable advantage from a munificent bequest of the late Thomas Telford, Esq. A monument to Sir John Malcolm has been erected on the highest hill at a cost of £1,300, and more recently, one has been raised in the market place, in memory of his brother Sir Poulteney Malcolm. The market day is Wednesday; the fairs are held on the 16th April, the last Tuesday in May (old style), 26th July (for lambs) 18th September, and in November: there are also two hiring days—one in May, the other in November.

CANONBIE (or Canonby) is a village and parish delightfully situated on the banks of the Esk, halfway between Longtown and Langholm, and on the southern border of the county; it is separated from England by the river Liddel, whose romantic banks

COLLIN, ROUCAN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LOCHMABEN is a town of considerable antiquity, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and capital of the parish of the name, 65 miles s. from Edinburgh, 70 s.e. from Glasgow, 33 s. e. from Sanquhar, 30 n. w. from Carlisle, 21 s. e. from Thornhill, the same distance w. from Langholm, 15 s. from Moffat, 13 n. w. from Annan, 10 w. n. w. from Ecclefechan, 8 n. by e. from Dumfries, and 4 w. from Lockerbie—the last named a railway station on the Caledonian line—situated in a level country, surrounded by a beautiful amphitheatre of hills, and by all the charms which wood and water can bestow. It traces its origin to a very early age, and derives its name from the loch on which it is so delightfully placed, the word Lochmaben signifying, in the Scots-Irish, the lake on the white plain. The loch, which is about three miles in circumference, abounds with several sorts of fish—among others the vendace (or vendise), which is peculiar to these waters, and is said not to be met with any where else in Britain. The town owes its rise to the protection of a castle of vast strength, which was built by Robert Bruce, lord of Annandale, and was the chief residence of the Bruces till the end of the thirteenth century. It stood on the north-west of the lake, which was called the Castle Loch, and the castle was surrounded by a deep moat. This ancient castle was succeeded by a much larger fortress, built on a peninsula on the south-east side of the loch. This edifice, with its outworks, covered about 16 acres; after different grants to various relations of the Bruces, it was annexed by parliament, in 1487, to the crown. Some of the walls still exist; they are of great thickness, and, with the melancholy firs which mingle with them, present a gloomy yet interesting mass of ruins. The period of the first erection of Lochmaben into a royal burgh is of too remote a date for conjecture; its present charter was granted

James VI., and bears date 16th of July, 1612, from which it appears that the town was more than once destroyed and burnt during the civil wars, its public edifices plundered, and its ancient records, &c. totally lost; but although the whole of the former privileges have been regained, the place itself has never recovered its former consequence. The municipal government is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and treasurer, all of whom are chosen out of fifteen councillors. The burgh unites with Dumfries, Annan and Sanquhar, in returning one member to parliament. The town-house, with its tower and clock, stands at the end of the principal street. A subscription library affords literary and other information to the gentlemen by whom it is supported, and there are freemasons lodges and a savings' bank; but it is a place of narrow trade, and, with the exception of a few stockings that are made, is unconnected with manufacture; it is, in fact, a rural town, solely dependant upon its own resources.

The parish church is a handsome and convenient building in the pointed style, with a bold square tower, in which are two well-toned bells. An edifice has been recently erected for the free church, and there is a chapel for the united presbyterians. The market is held during the winter months, every fortnight, for the sale of pork, &c.; and fairs on the first Tuesdays in January, April, July and October, (all old style.)

The small village of TINWALD, which is situated about six miles from Lochmaben, was the birth-place of Paterson, the projector of the Bank of England, and the planner of the disastrous Darien expedition. The parish is of a triangular figure, each side of which is about four miles and a half in length; its northern boundary is watered by the pleasant river Ae. The greater part of the parish is arable; within its precincts, five miles from Dumfries, is Annisfield Castle, the seat of the ancient family of Charteris.

The parish of TORTHORWOLD lies near the foot of Nithsdale, and is bounded by Tinwald on the north, by Lochmaben and Mouswald on the east, and separated on the west from Dumfries parish by the Lochar water. It extends six miles in length from north to south, by a breadth, at the northern extremity, of about two miles and a half, tapering to a point on the south. The village, which is situated in the north of the parish, is about four miles from Lochmaben, and the same distance from Dumfries. In this village is an excellent classical and commercial academy; and in the vicinity are the ruins of the ancient castle of Torthorwold, supposed to have existed since the thirteenth century. On the road between Dumfries and Annan is COLLIN, and near the parish church is ROUCAN, both villages belonging to this parish.

LOCKERBIE,

AND THE PARISHES OF DRYFESDALE, SAINT MUNGO, TUNDERGARTH AND APPLGARTH.

LOCKERBIE is a neat small market town, in the parish of Dryfesdale, 65 miles s. of Edinburgh, 12 n.e. of Dumfries, 11 n.w. of Annan, 6 n.w. of Ecclefechan, and 4 e. of Lochmaben; situated on the great mail road betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle, 72 miles s.e. of the former, and 26½ n.w. of the latter, and on the Caledonian railway, for which line there is a station here. The town occupies a considerable space of ground; the buildings have a regular and clean appearance, and the surrounding country presents some fine scenery. The origin of this place is remote, and probably, for a long period, its character was only that of a small hamlet, attached to, and protected by the residence or stronghold of a family of some power. It is within the last century that improvements have manifested themselves to some extent, which may be mainly ascribed to the liberality of the proprietors, who have granted long terms to the tenants on their estates. Manufactures have not made their appearance in Lockerbie, but the trade in articles of general and domestic consumption is good, and progressively augmenting with the increasing prosperity of its fairs and public markets. A branch of the Western Bank of Scotland, and of the Edinburgh and Glasgow bank, are established here; and there are several good inns: a bank for savings opened in 1824, has been eminently successful.

The parish church stands about thirty yards off the High-street, and is centrally placed in relation to the parish generally, the extreme points not being at a greater distance than three miles and a half. The free church, erected in 1843, is a handsome ornament to Bridge-street, and the chapel, belonging to the united pre-byterian congregation, is a convenient building. There is a female society for the relief of the occasional poor, a masonic lodge, and two libraries—one parochial, the other circulating.

The market is held on Thursday; from the commencement of October till the end of April it is extensively supplied with pork, at which there is sometimes sold, in a single day, from £1,000 to £2,000 worth; there is also a market for hiring servants on the second Thursday of October, (old style.) Fairs are held on the second Thursdays in January, February, March, April, and May, the third Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August, (all old style); the last fair, which is for lambs, is the largest and last lamb fair in Scotland—the number of lambs on the ground being, in some years, from 30 to 40,000; the remaining fairs are a new one (established for the sale of cattle) in September, the second Thursday in October for cattle and horses, the second Thursday in November, and the Thursday before Christmas, (all old style.) These fairs add much to the prosperity of the town, being well attended; the new one in September takes place the Thursday before the large fair on Brough Hill. The day following the lamb fair in August, races occasionally take place.

DRYFESDALE parish is in the district of Annandale; the extreme length from north-east to south-west is about seven miles; the average breadth of the upper part is about three miles, and of the lower half about one and a half; about two-thirds of the parish is lowland, and the rest is hilly. There is also a considerable extent of holm land towards the junction of the Annan and the Dryfe. Of the whole extent of ten thousand acres in this parish, about eight thousand are either cultivated or have occasionally been in tillage, the remainder being in moor and pasturage. The point which assumes the greatest height is Whitewoolen hill, the elevation of which is 650 feet above the level of the sea.

SAINT MUNGO parish is in the district of Annandale, through which the road to Glasgow and Carlisle passes, and at a short distance from the villages of Ecclefechan and Lockerbie. Castlemilk is one of the most beautiful mansions in this part of Scotland, being romantically situated in the midst of pleasure grounds, and in the bosom of a fine valley: it is now without a resident proprietor. This was originally the seat of the ancient Lords of Annandale. Much later it belonged to the Maxwells and the Douglasses. In the minority of Edward VI. it was besieged by the Duke of Somerset, and some of the balls fired upon that occasion were found in 1771, when planting a spot afterwards called 'The Cannon Holes.'

TUNDERGARTH is a parish in which a great number of sheep are pastured, and is separated from that of Saint Mungo to the west, is nearly 13 miles in length, by a breadth of only about two miles at its widest part. The old castle, now in ruins, is deserving of notice, as it was formerly the residence of the Marquesses of Annandale. The conspicuous hill, called Brunswark, overlooks the district from the south.

APPLGARTH (or Applegirth) is a parish in the presbytery of Lochmaben; in length northwards it extends nearly five miles and a half, and its breadth eastward the same. It is bounded by Wanphray on the north-east, by Hutton on the east, by Johnstone and Lochmaben on the west, and by Dryfesdale on the south. The village lies on the banks of the Annan, about eleven miles from Dumfries.

MOFFAT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF JOHNSTONE, KIRKPATRICK, JUXTA, AND WAMPHRAY.

MOFFAT is a parish in the interesting district of Annandale—the town, which is small and very respectable, is 51 miles s. of Edinburgh, and 21 n. of Dumfries; situated two miles from the Beatoock station, on the Caledonian railway. It stands upon rising ground gently declining towards the south, immediately at the foot of a chain of mountains, which form the northern boundaries of Dumfries-shire, with the adjacent counties of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk, and which completely environ it on the west, north, and east; the huge summits of this elevated region reach to various altitudes; some covered with wood—others beautifully chequered and skirted with plantations of unequal size, and natural clumps of birch, oak, and mountain ash, affording shelter and enclosure to the intervening grounds, which are partly cultivated and partly in pasture. The principal street of the town (High-street) is wide and spacious, laid down upon the principle recommended by the late Mr. McAdam, and is clean and dry, even within a few minutes after the heaviest fall of rain. It commands an extensive and fine prospect of a delightful valley, stretching towards the south, interspersed with edge-rows, meadows and corn-fields, and pleasingly diversified by the windings of the river Annan, which first makes its appearance in an extraordinary ravine in this district, and runs at the distance of about two hundred yards from the town; the surrounding plantations, every year increasing in extent and beauty, are within view from the street. The houses are modern and commodious, well suited for the accommodation of visitors, and there are four principal inns, admirably conducted by their respective proprietors—their names are, the 'Annandale Arms,' the 'Beatoock Bridge,' the 'Black Bull,' and the 'Star.'

Moffat has long and justly been celebrated as a fashionable summer resort, and for the medicinal virtues of its mineral waters. The springs are three in number, one sulphureous and two chalybeate; the sulphureous spring is distinguished by the name of 'Moffat well,' and is about a mile from the town; a very good carriage-road leads to it. There are likewise in the town well frequented bath-rooms, to which a spacious news-room is attached for the use of visitors. It is now upwards of two hundred years since the discovery of the valuable qualities of this spring, during which time it has been much frequented from all parts of Scotland, the northern counties of England, and in some instances from Ireland. In all scrofulous and scorbutic cases it is a powerful remedy, being seldom known to prove ineffectual when the lungs were not diseased; in the removal of bilious complaints, also, it is eminently successful, as well as in creating appetite and promoting digestion; and it is an excellent specific for gravel and rheumatism: it sparkles in the glass like champagne, but is so volatile that it can be drunk in perfection only at the fountain. Hartfell spa was first discovered in the year 1748, by a man named John Williamson: it issues from a rock of alum slate, in the side of Hartfell mountain, near Moffat; it may be carried to any distance, and will keep for years; it is a potent restorative, highly beneficial in all complaints peculiar to the fair sex, and may be advantageously used as a wash in the healing of obstinate cutaneous eruptions. The other chalybeate is of a peculiar nature, and obtained in a very curious manner, viz. by pouring water upon a rock in the side of a savage dell, called 'Gartpool Linn,' in the vicinity of the town: the surface of this rock is strongly impregnated with sulphate of alumina and iron; the water is much stronger than that of Hartfell, and consequently is taken in smaller portions—not more than a wine-glass full at a time. About four miles north-west from hence there is a petrifying spring, and there are others that do not attract so much notice. To the antiquary the neighbourhood of Moffat presents many objects of gratification, and to these are attached traditions worthy of attention, but too numerous and prolix for detail in a work like the present. The celebrated road maker, John Loudon McAdam, died in this town on the 26th November, 1836, in his eighty-first year: he was a native of Ayrshire, but was much attached to the locality of Moffat, where he spent a great portion of his early life; upon one of his sons was conferred the honour of knighthood, which his father had declined on account of his age, and growing infirmities. Mr. McAdam received from government £10,000, in two separate instalments; to his credit it is recorded that, during the whole career of his honourable independent service, he never contracted for works, deeming such a method of acquiring wealth incompatible with the duties of an engineer.

The parish and town of Moffat derive their name from the principal stream, the vale of which is deep, and of a very romantic and pastoral character; it was formerly densely wooded, and must, therefore, have well accorded with the appellation it received—Moffat being a corruption of Oud-vat, which signifies, translated from the Gaelic, 'the long deep mountain hollow.' The parish is the highest in the entire district of Annandale; its greatest length is about fifteen miles, and its breadth from eight to nine. The different rivers supply abundance of amusement to the trout-angler; and the celebrated alpine lake, Lochakeen (whose elevation is upwards of one thousand feet above the level of the sea), contains the finest species of that fish in the south of Scotland. The outlet of the waters of this lake is by the lofty and magnificent cascade called the 'Grey-Mare's Tail,' tumbling over precipitous rocks, computed to be about four hundred feet above the level of the vale, and which appears, from the opposite side of the glen, to be one unbroken fall. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs on the third Friday in March, the second Friday in September, and on the 20th of October, or the Tuesday after.

SANQUHAR,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CRAWICK, KIRKCONNEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS

SANQUHAR is a parish in the district of Nithsdale—the town an ancient one, and burgh of barony, is 56 miles s.s.w. of Edinburgh, the same distance s. by E. of Glasgow, 32 E. s. E. of Ayr, and somewhat about 26 N. W. of Dumfries; situated on the road, up the left bank of the Nith, passing into Ayrshire, and on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, for which line there is a station on the east side of the town. Sanquhar, it is supposed, owes its origin to a castle of considerable importance, the ruins of which are now to be seen at a short distance to the south-east, on a high bank overlooking the river Nith. It must have been a building of great strength, having towers at the angles, and was surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Creighton (or Crichton), ancestors to the Earl of Dumfries. The castle, as well as greater part of the land in the neighbourhood, is now the property of the Duke of Buccleuch. About a mile from it stands the house of Eliock, the residence of the family of Veitch, which gave a senator to the college of justice in the last century; this mansion lays claim (which is disputed by some authorities) to the honour of being the birth-place of the 'admirable Crichton.' The town consists chiefly of one main street. The family of Queensberry has been great patrons of this town, particularly in improvements on the roads which pass through or approach to it. The late duke also erected the town hall, at his sole expense; it stands at the end of High-street, and has a tower, with a clock. Sanquhar is the principal coal mart in the county, and large quantities are supplied to Dumfries and other parts. In this parish, as well as that of Kirkconnel, the seams are most valuable; the coal-field extends seven miles in length and two and a half in breadth, and the veins are from three feet eight inches to four feet six inches in depth. The Duke of Buccleuch is the chief proprietor. At the eastern extremity of the parish, about nine miles from the town, are the valuable lead mines of WANLOCKHEAD, belonging likewise to that nobleman. They are said to have been discovered in the minority of James VI., by some Germans, who were employed in searching for gold about this spot: at present, employment, by these works, is furnished to a considerable number of miners, artisans and others. At the village of CRAWICK MILL, half a mile north-west of the town, on the banks of the Crawick stream, is a considerable manufactory for carpets, in which upwards of sixty men, forty women, and a number of children, of both sexes are employed; and from the looms in the town twenty thousand yards of tartan cloth are generally produced annually for the Carpet Company. There are also about one hundred and fifty cotton weavers employed by the Glasgow manufacturers, and upwards of three hundred females of the neighbourhood are occupied in embroidering muslins for the same market. In the town is a large manufactory for spades, shovels, and other agricultural implements. A branch of the British Linen Company's bank is settled here, and one of the Western Bank of Scotland; there is also a Savings' Bank and a Mechanics' Institute.

Sanquhar was erected into a burgh of barony in 1484, and advanced to the dignity of a royal burgh, by charter from James VI., in 1596. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and eleven councillors, and, in connexion with Dumfries, Annan, and Lochmaben, sends one member to parliament. A sheriff's small-debt court is held here four times a year.

The places of worship, in the town, are the parish church, a free church, and two for united presbyterians. The parish church, which was erected in 1823, on the site of the old one, is a very handsome edifice, with a square tower, and stands on elevated ground at the west end of the town. At Wanlockhead is a chapel, in connexion with the establishment, for the accommodation of the miners and others employed in the lead works. The executors of the late James Crichton, of Friars' carse, in this county, and a native of Sanquhar, have appropriated £2,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a free school in Sanquhar; the interest of the money, since it was set apart for this design, has been laid out in purchasing a site for the school, and the surplus, after the building is completed, will be invested for its endowment. The weekly market, formerly held on Friday, is no longer continued, but there are four cattle markets held in the year—namely, on the third Friday in April; on the Friday before Tarbolton fair, in June; on the Friday before Falkirk tryst, in October, and on the Friday before Mauchline fair, in November. Fairs on the first Friday after the twelfth day in the months of February, May, August and November (old style); and a large fair for lambs, sheep and wool on the 17th July, or the first Friday after.

KIRKCONNEL village is four miles from Sanquhar, and eight from New Cumnock; situate on the high road between Dumfries and Glasgow. It contains the parish church and parochial school. The parish, which is bounded by that of Sanquhar on the south and east, is fifteen miles in length and eight in breadth. In it are two mineral springs, one possessing medicinal properties similar in effect to those of Hartfield spa, near Moffat; the other similar to the Kirkland spa, in Galloway. The village inhabitants are almost all employed in the lead mines. The Duke of Buccleuch is proprietor of nearly the whole of this parish.

AND THE PARISHES OF MORTON, DURISDEER, AND PENPONT, THE VILLAGE OF CARRON BRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THORNHILL is a very respectable and considerable village, in the parish of Morton, 66 miles S. by E. of Glasgow, 48 N.W. of Carlisle, 40 N.E. of Newton Stewart, 34 S.E. of Kilmarnock, 30 N.W. of Annan, the same distance S.E. of Dumfries, 22 N.E. of New Galloway, 14 N.W. of Dumfries, 12 S.E. of Sanquhar, and 7½ N.E. of Minnieville. It is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and is charmingly seated upon an eminence rising from the banks of the Nith, and on the great road from Carlisle to Dumfries and Glasgow. The country around Thornhill is exceedingly beautiful, the hills bounding in the scene as with an immense wall. The vale of the Nith is here very spacious, and the hills spring suddenly up from the plain, at such a distance, as to suggest no idea of sterility. From the rising grounds a little way up the hills to the west of the village, the noble massive castle of Drumlanrig, the property of the Duke of Buccleuch, looks down upon the plain. The scenery is also ornamented by Cossenoeh, the property and residence of J. Grierson, Esq.; Eccles House, Lauderdale Maitland, Esq.; Waterside, belonging to James Hoggan, Esq.; Clousburn Hall, Sir James S. Monteath, Bart.; Dabton, William Maxwell, Esq.; Nith bank, the Misses Yorstown; Baitford, Samuel Moffat, Esq. &c. The Duke of Buccleuch is sole superior of this thriving village. Since his majority, the Duke has expended very considerable sums in its improvement, and it is now lighted with gas by a company.

Thornhill formerly ranked as a burgh of barony, and within the last fifty years the ruins of the old gaol were to be seen: the site is now covered by a handsome house, the property of Mr. James Dalziel. The streets are wide and airy: in the centre of the village is a handsome monument or cross (erected by the late Duke of Queensberry), surmounted by the figure of a winged Pegasus, associated with the arms of that noble family. The trade of the village is chiefly of a domestic nature; there are, however, a tannery and a brewery, and it can boast of two of the most respectable and comfortable hotels that can be met with in the south of Scotland—they are the 'Buccleuch and Queensberry Arms,' and the 'George.' A subscription library of 600 volumes; a literary and philosophical society; an elegant freemasons' hall, erected in 1834, and two or three benevolent societies are here established, and well sustained.

The parish church, which was erected in 1781, was so inconveniently situated, as regarded the accommodation of the majority of the inhabitants, that it was taken down, and a new one in 1840-1 erected, in a handsome style, contiguous to the village. Fairs are held on the second Tuesdays in the months of February, May, August, and November (old style); and on the last Friday in June; the latter chiefly for hiring reapers and agricultural labourers.

About two miles to the north of Thornhill, on the road to Sanquhar, and seated on the banks of the river from which it derives its first appellation, is the small romantic village of CARRON-BRIDGE, lying partly in the parish of Morton, and partly in that of Dun-deer.

The parish of MORTON extends from the left bank of the Nith north-eastward to the borders of Lanarkshire, a distance of between six and seven miles by a breadth of about four; it is bounded on the north and north-west by Penpont and Durisdeer, and on the east and south by Closeburn: it is both pastoral and arable, and, where cultivated, is well enclosed and fertile. In addition to the Nith, the Carron and Cample streams pass through the parish, nearly the whole of which is the property of the Duke of Buccleuch. Within the district is the large ruin of Morton Castle, the ancient residence of the Earl of that title.

PENPONT parish, which gives name to a presbytery, is an extensive agricultural district, of irregular form and uneven surface, having comparatively little flat or low grounds: the latter description of land is found chiefly upon the verge of the rivers which flow through it. The village is about two miles from Thornhill; the church, which is contiguous to the village, was built in 1782; it underwent a thorough repair in 1834, when a session-house was annexed to it. There are two other places of worship in the parish, one for the relief congregation (erected in 1800); the other belonging to the reformed presbytery. The stupendous Glenquhargen Craig, rising perpendicularly one thousand feet, and one of the greatest natural wonders in Scotland, is in this parish; there are likewise the remains of Roman encampments, causeways, and a castle. The Duke of Buccleuch is nearly the sole proprietor of this parish. ~~Three hiring markets are held annually on the third Tuesdays of March, June, and October.~~

The parish of DURISDEER is bounded on the south and north-east by Morton, on the north and north-east by the parish of Crawford, on the south and south-west by Penpont, and on the north-west by Sanquhar; it is eight miles in length, and six in breadth. In this parish is Drumlanrig Castle, the superb and noble residence of the Duke of Buccleuch; it was erected towards the close of the seventeenth century. About a mile above the church the traces of a Roman encampment are obvious. Exclusive of three small properties, the entire parish belongs to the nobleman before-mentioned.

ELGINSHIRE,

SO designated from the name of its capital, ELGIN, and sometimes MORAYSHIRE, from being the central division of the 'Province of Moray'—is one of the northern counties of Scotland; bounded on the north by that branch of the North Sea called the Moray Frith, on the east and south east by Banffshire, on the south-west by Inverness-shire, and on the west by the latter county and also that of Nairn. The figure of Elginshire is very irregular, being intersected in several places by districts of the counties which form its boundaries; with Nairn it is so intimately connected, that, in speaking of its shape, that small county is not unfrequently included in the description: thus conjoined, the district is somewhat of triangular figure—with the apex pointed inland—and in this quarter partaking of the wild, rocky and mountainous character of the Highlands. The county may be said to comprehend 470 square miles of land, and seven square miles of lakes. For the last few years agricultural improvements have made rapid strides here, and the greater portion of waste land is now either brought into cultivation or planted with forest trees. In ancient times the limits of the county were much more extensive than at present, comprehending all that tract of country which lies between the river Spey on the east, the Beaully on the north-west, and the northern confines of Argyshire on the south-west. The remains of antiquity are numerous, of which the cathedral of Elgin, the bishop's palace at Spynie, the priory of Pluscardine, the castles of Lochindorb and Dunphail, and the 'dun' of Relugas, are the chief. Of the struggles of the natives with the Danes, who infested the district in former ages, there are various testimonials, such as 'cairns,' monumental pillars, &c. &c. The 'Province of Moray,' anciently so important and extensive, in the present day is without any political distinction, and is divided into the three several shires of Banff, Moray (or Elgin), and Nairn. On the east it is separated from Aberdeenshire by the Deveron; on the west it is bounded by Inverness-shire, and on the north it has the large arm of the sea, designated from it the Moray Frith. So late as the time of Charles I, the Highlanders considered Moray as a sort of neutral land, where every man was at liberty to take his prey. The Province of Moray suffered more, perhaps, than any other district in Scotland by the civil wars. The people were then generally attached to the covenant; and, as Montrose made it one of his principal scenes of action, it is easy to conceive that its peaceable farmers were not permitted to have both these opinions and their goods undisturbed. Montrose, in his descent upon Moray, in 1645, after his victory of Innerlochy, destroyed all the houses of such as did not join his standard, and gave up the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Elgin to indiscriminate pillage.

SOIL, SURFACE, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The soil of this county, though less uniform than that of Banffshire, is for the most part a sandy loam—in some places a sandy gravel; considerable tracts are of very fertile clay, and of the most genial mould. The low country may be pictured as a large plain, extending from the Spey westward, between the shore and a range of mountains, for the whole length of the district, nearly forty miles—but of unequal breadth, from about five to twelve miles or more, measured on a straight line from the hills to the shore: this plain, however, is diversified, over its whole extent, by ridges of lower hills, in general nearly parallel to the shore: beyond this are valleys of great fertility and beauty, near the sources of the rivers Spey, Lossie and Findhorn—with the lesser vales along the banks of the tributary streams which pervade the intervening hills. Within the range of the mountain district, the country may be described as chiefly pastoral; the arable land, in most instances, hanging upon the acclivities of the valleys, or stretching out in narrow plains upon the banks of the waters which wind among the hills—the wideness of the valley bearing a relative proportion to the size of the river. The upper part of the county is popularly termed 'the Brae of Moray': it is mountainous and woody, and abounds in beautiful lakes. The agriculture is very spirited, and the land in general yields a higher rent than that of the neighbouring shires. In the lower part of the county, the Earl of Fife, and other proprietors, have formed plantations to so great an extent, that almost every part of the country inaccessible to the plough has been covered with different species of forest trees. A considerable traffic in the export of wood from the forests of Strathspey, by floating it to Garmouth, has been carried on to advantage. Except sandstone, limestone, and marl, no mineral substance of value has been discovered in this district. The greatest attention is paid to the breed and to the feeding of cattle, and the culture of wheat is not so general anywhere northward of the Grampians. Little can be said respecting manufactures: woollen stuffs are made to a small amount, as well as linen yarn; which, together with grain, cattle, salmon, hewn freestone, wood, and whisky, comprehend the principal exports: of the latter—some idea of the extent of trade in this article may be gathered from the fact, that the distilleries, within the Elgin excise collection, pay annually £50,000 or upwards to government, as duty on spirits. The coast of this district, although within the fifty-eighth degree of north latitude, has ever been distinguished for the mildness of its climate: the harder kinds of fruit—all the varieties of the apple, and almost all of the pear and of the plum—by a little attention may be abundantly produced on every farm; fruits, also, of greater delicacy—the apricot, the nectarine, and the peach—ripen sufficiently on a wall in the open air. With respect to the winds, the most prevailing gales are from the north-west. This part of the country presents no object so elevated as to attract the clouds or to impede their course; and from this cause, it is concluded, falls of snow are comparatively unfrequent, and of small depth, as they are drifted over the subjacent levels, inasmuch that the operations of husbandry are but little interrupted by the inclemency of the weather. It is asserted that, in the lower part of Moray, the climate is as warm, and the atmosphere at least as dry, as in any district of Scotland; in the higher quarter, the weather is more mild than in the adjoining county of Banff, at the same distance from the sea-coast—a natural consequence of its local position, the progress of cultivation, and the inherent warmth of the soil.

RIVERS AND LAKES.—The principal rivers are the SPEY, the FINDHORN, and the LOSSIE, all flowing in a northerly direction, and each teeming with the finest salmon. There are many delightful lakes, of which LOCH SEYNIE is most deserving of notice: it is three miles in length and one in breadth, and appears to have been formerly a firth of the sea, though it is now shut up at the east and west by a long extent of valuable ground; in accordance with this apparencey, the land between the lake and the sea still retains the appellation of Ross Isle; and a corroborative proof of the accuracy of the popular designation is exhibited by the sea-shells (particularly those of the oyster) that are found on the margin of the lake, several feet below the surface of the earth. Loch Spynie nourishes several of the aquatic tribes, but none in such abundance as the perch and the pike.

Elginshire comprehends sixteen parishes, and eight parts of parishes; it contains two royal burghs—ELGIN and FORRES: the former is united with Cullen, Banff, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to parliament; and the county at large, in conjunction with Nairnshire, deputes another representative.

(b) The parishes of Bellie, Boharm and Inveraven are partly in Banffshire and there wholly entered.
(c) Cromdale parish is mostly in Inverness-shire, and is there wholly entered; it contains 3,234 inhabitants.
(d) Rothiemurcus township, in Duthil parish, is locally in Inverness-shire, and is there entered.

The total annual value of Real Property, in Elginshire, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £73,288; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1843, was £99,298 lls.

DUTHIL, ROTHIEMURCHUS, CARR-BRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUTHIL, with which is incorporated ROTHIEMURCHUS, is a parish lying partly in this county, and partly in that of Inverness; the river Spey is the divisional line here between the two districts, and the river Dulnan intersects that part of the parish situated in Moray, for nearly thirteen miles, when it falls into the Spey. Rothiemurchus (now defined as a township), lies between the Cairngorm mountain and the Spey, a short way further up that river than the greater part of Duthil; jointly they extend in length twenty miles, by a breadth of seventeen. The whole is generally highland in its character; game is plentiful, and there is a considerable quantity of natural wood. The name of Grant is remarkably prevalent in this district. The parish church stands about six miles from Grantown, and 24 from Inveraven; and there is a free church in the course of erection. CARR-BRIDGE, or, as it is commonly called, the "Bridge of Carr," is a small village in this parish, 19 miles from Kingussie, and 25 from Inverness.

POST OFFICE, CARR-BRIDGE, Lewis D. Munro, Post Master. — Letters from EDINBURGH and all parts of the SOUTH arrive every morning at twenty-three minutes past two and are despatched thereto at a quarter before ten at night.

Letters from INVERNESS and all parts of the NORTH arrive every night at a quarter before ten, and are despatched thereto at twenty-three minutes past two in the morning.

Letters from ABERDEEN, FOCHABERS, GRANTOWN, &c., arrive every forenoon at eleven and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past one in the afternoon.

ELGIN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF LOSSIEMOUTH, BURGHEAD, BISHOP MILL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ELGIN is a royal burgh, the capital of its shire, and the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Moray; 189 miles N. of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen, and 153 miles N. of Aberdeen, and 153 miles N. of Brechin and Huntly, 83 N. of Brechin, 64 W. of Aberdeen, 39 N.E. of Inverness, 12 E. by N. of Forres, and 9 W. of Fochabers; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the river Lossie, about five miles above its influx into the Moray Firth at Lossiemouth, and surrounded by hills, o'er-clad with waving pine, beech, oak, and elm trees. It is the general supposition that the town was originally a settlement of Helgy, a general of the army of Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who, about the year 927, conquered Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, and Moray, and it is said from this person the name of Elgin is derived; and as the word Helgyn is still used in the inscription upon the seal of the town, it is probable that this etymology is correct. So early as the reign of William the Lion a castle was built here, the ruins of which are still visible on an eminence, called 'Lady-hill', on the north-west side of the town. In 1224 Andrew, bishop of Moray, translated the bishopric from Spynie to the church of the Holy Trinity, near Elgin, but the cathedral was burnt down by Alexander Stewart, Lord of Badenoch (commonly called the Red Wolf of Badenoch), son of Robert II, in 1390, who was forced from his fastnesses in Lockerbie, to do penance for the deed. About the year 1414 it was rebuilt in a magnificent manner. From what still remains, it appears to have been a large and superb edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, two hundred and sixty-four feet in length, and thirty-five in breadth. The chapter-house, which still remains pretty entire, and was some years since repaired, and covered with a roof of lead, by the Exchequer, is a beautiful specimen of tasteful architecture; and the whole, when perfect, is supposed to have been one of the most magnificent religious structures in Europe. The ruins form a conspicuous object on the approach to Elgin from the east; while, as a beautiful contrast, immediately opposite, towards the south, stands Anderson's Institution, for the support of old age and the education of youth, a fine modern structure, erected a few years since by the munificent bequest of General Alexander Anderson, H.E.I.C.S. a native of the place, and of very poor parentage. The funds for the support of this institution are between £70,000, and £80,000. The structure is in the Grecian style, and occupies about an acre of ground: it is surmounted by a handsome dome, and on the pediment in front, which is supported by four massive stone pillars, is placed a statue of the benefactor, represented in the attitude of delivering a bible to a youthful figure, whilst, with his right hand, he is supporting the figure of an aged man: the building cost about £8,000. The apartments for the aged are in the west wing; those for the scholars of the institution, of whom there are about forty, who are orphans, and are wholly supported and educated in the establishment, are in the east wing. At the back, or south wing, is the free school, where the children receive a free education, but are supported at home: the number of these averages from two hundred to two hundred and thirty. After passing through the extensive and improving nursery grounds of George Morrison and Son, this building has a pleasing effect on entering the town, from Aberdeen. The western extremity of the town is embellished by Gray's Hospital, a noble and modern structure. Dr. Alexander Gray, of India, a native of Elgin, by will bequeathed £30,000, for the purpose of erecting and endowing a hospital for the sick poor of this town and county. This building is delightfully seated upon an eminence, and has a fine portico, supported by stately pillars, and surmounted by an elegant dome: the whole is spacious, and built of fine stone, according to a design furnished by Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh.

The principal street of the town is about a mile in length, widening in the centre, where stands the established church, a beautiful modern structure, after a plan by Archibald Simpson, Esq., it is calculated to seat a congregation of two thousand. The western pediment is supported by six massive fluted columns; and at the east end is a lofty tower, surmounted by a figure of Demosthenes' lantern, supported by eight columns: the building cost about £8,000. On the west of it is a raised and spacious pavement, used as a market place for farmers' produce, and also a beautiful fountain, which has an imposing effect. A new thoroughfare, within these few years, has been opened called North street, commencing about the middle of the town: in this street are many fine buildings, particularly the Trinity Lodge Rooms, a handsome edifice erected in 1821, after a design by Mr. Burns, of Edinburgh, and at a cost of £3,000. This street is tastefully terminated by the Trinity or Scottish episcopal chapel, a neat Gothic edifice, erected in 1825. During the last few years Elgin has very considerably increased in extent, and many of the old buildings, which obtruded themselves upon the front of High-street, have been pulled down, and new structures raised in their places. In this street are the principal inns: among these the Royal Hotel, a commercial and posting establishment, is well known for its domestic comforts as well as economy. Here, and in North-street, are the banking houses—highly respectable branches of the Aberdeen Banking Company; the British Linen Company; the Commercial Bank of Scotland; the North of Scotland Bank, and the Caledonian Bank: in High-street is also the Savings' Bank. The trade of this burgh cannot be considered extensive, being situate in an agricultural district, and principally depending thereupon: there is, however, a woollen manufactory, which employs a good many hands; and a considerable correspondence is carried on with the south, by means of the steam boat, which now ply regularly to the adjoining ports. Of the other branches, a trade in corn, wool, and timber, is of some consequence, and there is one of the largest and most compact tanneries in the kingdom belonging to Mr. Culbard; whilst, in the neighbourhood, are extensive lime works, and a millstone quarry.

Alexander II, in 1224, granted to the burgesses of Elgin a guild of merchants, which still continues, though the funds of the corporation were, for a considerable period, merged in the common good; connected with the guildry, there is a flourishing charity fund, from which decayed members and their families derive handsome pensions. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and twelve councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Cullen, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to parliament.

There are several mineral springs in the vicinity of Elgin, and from the healing virtues of their waters, with the salubrity of the climate, many are supposed to have derived considerable benefit. The weekly markets are Tuesday and Friday. Fairs on the third Fridays in the months of February, March, and April; the second Friday in May, the first Tuesday in June, the third Tuesdays in July, August, September, and October, and the third Wednesday in December. The feeing markets are held on the Friday before the 26th of May, and the Friday before the 22nd of November; all (old style), except the December fair.

On the opposite bank of the Lossie is the small village of BISHOP MILL, the superior of which is the Earl of Seafield. It contains a few of the usual trades found in a country village, and two corn mills, also the same number of schools—one connected with the free church, the other an assembly school.

LOSSIEMOUTH is a small village in the parish of Drains, five miles north from Elgin, situated on the banks of the Lossie, at its influx with the Moray Firth, from which locality its name is derived. It is the sea-port of Elgin, and is fast advancing in importance. A new harbour has been formed, which renders it a safe and commodious haven for shipping. The cost of this erection amounted to £20,000. An Act of Parliament was obtained in July, 1846, for a railway from Stothfield and Lossiemouth harbour, to Elgin, Rothes, and Craigellachie, called the 'Morayshire railway,' but it is to be regretted that the works have not yet been commenced.

BURGHHEAD is a small fishing village in the parish of Duffus, 8 miles W. from Elgin, and about 10 N.E. from Forres. It possesses a fine pier and a safe and commodious harbour, well protected from the north and east winds; at high water steam vessels may enter with perfect safety; at neap tides it has eleven to twelve feet of water, and at spring tides fourteen to fifteen feet. This was anciently a Roman as well as a Danish station: the remains of a fort of the latter nation are still visible; also a well, dug out of the solid rock, which is known by the name of the Roman well. The occupation of the inhabitants is fishing for salmon, herring, and cod. Several steam ships, schooners, and sloops belong to this place, and land goods here for the surrounding country.

FOCHABERS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF GARMOUTH, KINGSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FOCHABERS is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Bellie, 52 miles E. by N. of Inverness, 12 s. w. of Cullen, 9 E. of Elgin, and 8 N. W. of Keith; situated on the great north road from Edinburgh and Aberdeen to Inverness, and occupying a rural site in a deep valley, through which the Spey runs at a little distance to the west of the town. The houses are neatly built, and the streets diverge from a square, in the centre of which stands the parish church, and near to it an episcopal chapel; there is also a large chapel for Roman Catholics. An elegant stone bridge, which crossed the Spey near the town, was partly swept away by the great floods which occurred in the summer of 1820; it has subsequently been rebuilt.

This is not an important town as respects trade; its thoroughfare situation contributes somewhat to its prosperity, which is likewise assisted by the general neighbourhood by which it is surrounded. There are several houses for the accommodation of commercial men and other visitors, of these the principal is the Gordon Arms Hotel in the High-street, which is also a posting-house and are markaby well-conducted inn. Fochabers is a burgh, and is governed by a baron bailie, appointed by the Duke of Richmond, whose seat (Gordon Castle) graces the vicinity of the town, and is the great object of attraction to, and admiration of, strangers. It is allowed to be one of the most magnificent structures, and, perhaps, the finest mansion north of the Firth of Forth. The edifice was, originally, a gloomy tower in the centre of a morass, called the Bog of Gight, and accessible only by a narrow causeway and a draw-bridge. It is now a vast quadrangular structure, the front stretching to the length of 568 feet, surrounded by a beautiful park and equally beautiful country. It is approached by a gateway, at the west end of the town. The body of the building rises to the height of four lofty stories, and on each end is a pavilion of two stories, connected by a gallery of two lower stories. The ancient tower which is ninety feet high, overlooks the whole structure, and commands a view of the entire plain, with all its waving woods and the windings of the river Spey. The busts and pictures which grace the interior of this noble residence, are most valuable, comprising many rare and original gems of art. At the eastern end of the town stands a new and elegant building in the Elizabethan style of architecture—this is a free school founded by Alexander Milnes, Esq. a native of Fochabers; by his will dated, New Orleans, 17th of October, 1816, he bequeathed to the parishes of Bellie and Oldfish, the sum of 100,000 dollars, for establishing a free school. The cost of erecting the building amounted to £4,338 out of a fund of £16,415—£15,000 being invested in heritable security, yielding an annual income of £680, by means of which five hundred children are educated.

The parish of BELLIE, of which Fochabers is the Kirk town, is partly in this county and partly in Banffshire; it is six miles in length by four in breadth, bounded by the sea on the north, and, on the south-east, by Rathven and Boharm. The county of Moray comes here east of the Spey to a small extent, and on this piece of ground which is in the parish of Bellie, stands the town of Fochabers. When William, Duke of Cumberland, was on his march to engage Prince Charles at Culloden, he slept a night in the manse of Bellie. Fairs are held at Fochabers on the third Wednesday in January, the fourth Wednesdays in the months of March, May, October, and December, and the second Wednesday in August (all new style.)

GARMOUTH and KINGSTON are small villages in the parish of Speymouth, between four and five miles N.W. of Fochabers—the former situated at the mouth of the Spey, on its left bank. The principal trade is in ship-building and the exportation of corn, coal, timber and salmon; of the latter considerable quantities are caught and sent principally to London and other southern markets. The imports are guano, bone-manure, timber and coal. The port has a good harbour formed by the mouth of the Spey; and here a number of vessels have been built entirely of native wood. A fair is held on the 30th of June for cattle.

FORRES, FINDHORN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FORRES is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of its name, and the seat of presbytery; 201 miles N. by W. from Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen, and 165 by way of Brechin and Huntly; 75 N. W. of Aberdeen, 27 N. E. of Inverness, 21 W. of Fochabers, 20 E. of Fort George, 12 W. by S. of Elgin, and 11 E. of Nairn. In is a neatly-built clean town, and stands on rising ground, at the distance of about five miles from the bay of Findhorn, which is its sea-port. Forres is noted for one of the most remarkable stone obelisks, of ancient date, in Britain; this interesting object stands at the east end of the town, and is supposed to commemorate a pacification concluded here between Malcolm II. and Sweno, a Danish invader, about the beginning of the eleventh century: it is an enormous slab of grey stone, upwards of twenty feet in height, supported by a socket which conceals at least three feet more, and it is believed to reach fourteen feet into the ground; the shape resembles that of a very long wedge, or, as some fancifully describe it, a Highland broad-sword; the figures upon the obelisk, which are presumed to represent a battle and subsequent treaty, are wonderfully distinct, considering that they must have withstood the assaults of wind and weather during the last eight centuries. At the western extremity of the town on an eminence, once stood a castle, where-in Duffus, one of the early kings of Scotland was perfidiously killed by Donwald, governor of the fortress; which circumstance, it is said, Shakspeare has made use of in his dramatic version of the murder of King Duncan by Macbeth; and it was on the waste in the neighbourhood that that hero, along with Banquo (according to the old historians), met 'the weird sisters,' who gave him so many fatal promises: the exact spot on which that event is asserted, by the country-people, to have taken place is marked by a small clump of trees, about two hundred yards north from the post-road between Forres and Nairn, near a toll-bar five miles from the former of these places, and nearly on the confines of the two counties of Moray and Nairn; the extensive heath still surrounding this place is visibly worthy of the epithet 'blasted,' being one of the most desolate tracts of waste land anywhere to be seen. Upon an eminence to the south-east of the town stands a tower erected by the inhabitants of Forres, in honour of Lord Nelson: from its elevated situation a fine view is hence obtained, and the object is a conspicuous one for a considerable distance. Sloping to the north where the river Findhorn sweeps round from the south-west through the forest of Dainaway is a modern mansion, the seat of the Earl of Moray. Adjoining to it is the old castle a noble hall, built by Earl Randolph, regent of Scotland during the minority of David Bruce, capable of containing one thousand men under arms: here Mary Queen of Scots held her court, in 1566. In this part the heron is so numerous that whole flocks darken, at times, it is said the air, and drown with their cries the sound of the gushing waters. About two miles below the river, which is the Estuary of Findhorn bay, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge erected at the expense of government

The trade of Forres is not of an extensive character. Two distilleries, a good brewery, dye works, a woollen manufactory, and a capital hotel in the High street, conducted by Mr. Fraser. There are two branch banking establishments, and a national security savings' bank. We may not omit mention of a register office for servants under the patronage of the Highland Agricultural Society instituted in 1838, and which is also a Government Emigration Office. The meetings of the Trafalgar Club are held in Forres annually, and there are two masonic lodges. Forres is a royal burgh and governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and seventeen councillors. The burgh unites with Nairn, Fortrose, and Inverness, in returning one member to parliament. A sheriff's small debt court sits once in every two months for the recovery of debts under £8. 6s. 8d. In the centre of the High-street is a handsome structure surmounted by a spire; the building comprises the jail, a court-house, a council room, and post office, &c. At the south-east end is a good stone edifice erected in 1824, called Anderson's Institution, for educating children of the humbler classes of Forres, Rafford and Kinloss, founded by Jonathan Anderson, Esq., a native of Forres.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church, and for congregations of episcopalians, united presbyterians and independents. The markets are held on Tuesday and Friday; and the fairs, on the first Wednesdays in January and July; the third Wednesdays in February, April, May, and November; and the fourth Wednesdays in August and September. Feeding markets for hiring servants are held on the Saturday before the 26th May (called Whitsunday market); and the Saturday before the 22nd November (called Martinmas market), all new style.

FINDHORN is a small village and sea-port in the parish of Kinloss, five miles north of Forres, of which it may be considered the port. It lies at the point of land which is rendered peninsular by the bay of Brough Head on the east, and the harbour of Findhorn on the west; the latter is convenient, and possesses a share of coasting trade in the exportation of salmon, corn, bark, potatoes, and wood: the latter article is principally shipped to Newcastle and Sunderland, where it is used for props in the coal-pits. The imports consist of coal, guano, slate, tile, lime, and different kinds of goods. The curing of fish is an occupation extensively pursued here. The village boasts a good and comfortable inn—the Crown.

IS a parish partly in the county of Elgin, and partly in that of Banff: it is bounded on the south and south-west by Aberdour and Knockando, and on the north by Elgin, Birnie, &c., and on the east by the river Spey; it is nine miles in length by an average breadth of three. The village, which is a considerable one, is about 54 miles W.N.W. from Aberdeen, and 10 S. from Elgin; situated near the western bank of the Spey. The name is derived from Ruddh-i-us, signifying 'red water,' from the colour of the soil of which the banks of its streams are composed. The trades of the place are those usually found in a country village—if we may except two or three distilleries.

FIFESHIRE.

THIS is an extensive, populous, and important county, lying on the eastern side of Scotland; it is a peninsula, having the Frith of Forth on the south, the German Ocean on the east, and the Tay on the north, which river separates it from Forfarshire and Perthshire; on the west it is bounded by the latter county and Kinross, with a small part of Clackmannan. The breadth, from its eastern apex to its western point, where it intersects Kinross and Perth, is about thirty-five miles; towards the south, however (from Kinghorn to the verge of Kinross-shire), it is not more than ten miles across: the extreme length, from north-east to south-west, in a curved line, is full forty miles. The regularity of its figure is much interrupted by the intrusion of Kinross-shire, which creates a considerable indentation, not far from its centre, on the west. Its superficies comprise 467 square miles, or 298,880 English acres; of cultivated land there are about 210,000 acres, and of uncultivated about 90,000; the lakes cover about three square miles.

EARLY HISTORY.—At an early period the district of Fife included Kinross-shire, Clackmannanshire, and part of the counties of Perth and Stirling; it was then designated Ross, a term signifying a peninsula, and seems to have then been under one general jurisdiction. This large territory has long since been dismembered—Clackmannan was first taken from it, and next Kinross was erected into a distinct shire. The origin of the name 'Fife' has much puzzled etymologists, nor has a satisfactory conclusion ever been arrived at upon this subject. The monkish chroniclers assume its derivation from one Fífus Duffus, a hero of whom nothing more appears to be known than that he was a chieftain who performed some great exploits, and did the country essential service in war. The ancient history of Fife is enveloped in nearly similar obscurity: its original possessors were the Celts, and their invaders the Romans; and, towards the close of the ninth century, the King of the Scots obtained paramount sway over the district. Between this period and the eleventh century, the country was in a great measure either the property or under the jurisdiction of a potent succession of 'thanes,' of the title of Macduff: one of these, Duncan Macduff, was created Earl of Fife by Malcolm III. about 1057; and from this time, till the family honors were merged by the marriage of female heirs or extinction in other families, and finally lost by forfeiture in 1424, the Earls of Fife were amongst the most influential of the Scottish peerage. After the lapse of more than three centuries, the ancient title of Earl of Fife was revived as an Irish peerage, in 1759, in the person of William Duff, Lord Braco of Killybride, who, according to his genealogists, derived his descent from the original earls. The lineal descendant of this person now inherits the title and privileges—the estates of the family being situated principally in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire.

SOIL, SURFACE AND CLIMATE.—The peninsula of Fife was originally almost an entire forest, full of swamps; and while in this condition was the haunt of wild beasts, especially swine of a monstrous size. It is understood that such animals were not extirpated in the reign of James V. who, like his forefathers, often made Fife the scene of his hunting expeditions. In this county are found four kinds of soils, differing considerably in quality, and generally occupying distinct tracts of country. Along the braes facing the Frith of Forth, the composition of the land is for the most part excellent—being deep rich loam, good clay, and gravel mixed with loamy earth, based chiefly on whin-rock; north from the waving line which bounds this territory to the base of the hills on the south side of the vale of Fife, and from St. Andrew's on the east to the western parts of the county, the soil is in general vastly inferior—a great proportion being cold, poor, and very wet clay; the tract of the 'Howe of Fife' consists of loam, partly deep and moist, and partly light and dry, with also a considerable proportion of moor and moss; in the hilly district, from the vale to the river Tay, the land is almost uniformly of the best description, having much rich loam, clay and gravel. Consequent upon the progressive operation of habitual and experimental cultivation, these primitive properties of the soil have been modified, improved or ameliorated, according to the system or means and perseverance of the agriculturist. The peninsula of Fife exhibits in its surface a series of vales, stretching from west to east parallel with the sea on each side, and of greater or less dimensions: these vales, which, from the undulating character of the country, are in some places not so distinct as in others, are the basins of different small streams, which merge either in the Firth of Forth or St. Andrew's bay. The eminences of greatest altitude in Fifeshire are, Kelly-Law, 800 feet; Largo-Law, 1,020; East Lomond Hill, 1,260; and West Lomond Hill, 1,280, above the level of the sea. The climate of this peninsula is, perhaps, as genial and salubrious as that of other districts more to the south: the fogs, which formerly were continually exhalings from the lochs and marshes, to the injury of the crops and the health of the inhabitants, who were then afflicted with agues and other concomitant diseases, have long since been effectually dissipated by the drainage of the damp lands and the general spread of healthful cultivation. Altogether, Fife is a most important district: its agricultural prosperity and capabilities—its manufactures—its fisheries, and its mineral treasures—its burghs, sea-ports, and fine harbours—and its domestic and foreign commerce—form a combination of advantages that must distinguish this shire as one of the most favoured, probably, in all North Britain.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The shire is fortunate in possessing inexhaustible mines of coal, with whinstone, sandstone, limestone, and some ironstone. Coal and lime are wrought only in the southern division of the county, between the two extremities, and some miles inland; within this district there are as extensive lime and coal works as can be seen in Scotland. The sandstone found in this part is of the very best quality; from its beauty it is exported to Edinburgh, where some of the finest edifices have been built with it. Marl is abundant in some places—so likewise is fine clay, for the composition of bricks, tiles, and pottery. From the possession of the above fossils, and the exuberant produce of corn and cattle, it is a common saying among the people of Fife, that their county could support itself better, without the aid of imported articles, than any other district in Scotland. Besides supplying home consumption, it enjoys a very large export trade in corn, potatoes, pigs, black cattle, lime, coal, and sandstone—not to mention that of its manufactured goods. Lead has been discovered in the western Lomond, and mines of this ore have been profitably worked in the parish of Kemback:

pebbles, much admired for the high polish of which they are susceptible, have been found in different places; with agates and rubies of fine water. The staple MANUFACTURE of Fife is linen goods, in the weaving of which whole towns, villages and hamlets are busily employed without intermission: fine diapers and shirtings, and the most elegant table-linen, are produced from the looms of this county; of this trade Dunfermline is the principal seat; while the yarns, composed of foreign flax, are mostly spun and bleached on the Leven and in the adjacent places. Blankets and plaidings are also manufactured in the shire, but not to an important extent.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—Exclusive of the Forth and the Tay, the county is watered by several streams—none of which, however, are entitled to the denomination of rivers, except the Eden and the Leven, both of which abound with excellent salmon. The principal railway lines that pass through Fifeshire are the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee; the Stirling and Dunfermline; and the Dunfermline and Charles-town—the carriages on the last-named are drawn by horses. The route of the respective lines will be best ascertained by reference to the towns given in the directory of the shire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county forms a sheriffdom, under one sheriff depute; but, being divided into an eastern and a western district, each is placed under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute: in these two districts are comprehended the four subdivisions of St. Andrews, Cupar, Dunfermline, and Kirkcaldy. It has politically and ecclesiastically attached to it the islands of Inchcolm, Inchkeith, and May, in the Frith of Forth. Fife comprises sixty parishes, and two parts of parishes—having thirteen royal burghs with parliamentary representation: these, conjointly with Culross, in Perthshire—Queen's-ferry, in Linlithgowshire—and Stirling, in Stirlingshire—return three members; and the shire at large sends another to the senate.

ABERDOUR

Is a parish and village—the latter, which is also a sea-port, is 10 miles S. W. of Edinburgh (across the Frith of Forth), 8 from Kirkcaldy, and 3 from Burntisland, the nearest railway station, situated a few hundred yards from the Frith of Forth. This district formerly belonged to the monastery of Inchcolm; the small island of Inchcolm now belongs to the parish of Aberdour—the form of the latter is nearly square, measuring about three miles and a half each way; it lies along the north bank of the Forth, and is divided into two districts by a small ridge of hills, which runs from east to west. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and belonged, in the twelfth century, to the family of the Euponts, from which it passed to the Mortimers by marriage, and afterwards to the Douglasses, one of whom, in 1457, was created Lord Aberdour and Earl of Morton, whose castle, which stood close to the village, was burnt down by accident upwards of a century ago. Aberdour has a good harbour, and it is the shipping port for Donibristle colliery; it is also a place of summer resort of the citizens of Edinburgh and their families, there being good bathing ground here, and the exposure being sunny and warm. One of the chief causes of its popularity as a bathing-place is the ready access which is obtained by steam vessels, and other means of conveyance from the opposite shore. In the village are established, free and episcopal churches; the two former have schools attached to them.

ANSTRUTHER (EAST AND WEST), CELLARDYKES, AND KILRENNY.

ANSTRUTHER EASTER, a royal burgh, in the county of Fife, is 22 miles E. from Kirkcaldy, and about 10 S. from St. Andrews. It has an excellent harbour, which is the chief asylum for vessels overtaken by storms in the Firth of Forth. It was a place of great importance before the union with England, carrying on an extensive trade with Holland and France; and, from its contiguity to Cellardykes, it is still one of the first fishing stations in Scotland. The trade is principally of a domestic nature; baking, brewing, tanning, and fish-curing, are the most prominent branches; but there is likewise a considerable portion of business done in the export of grain, potatoes, &c.: a number of coasters, and several square-rigged vessels belong to the port; and a steam-packet flies three times a week, between it and Leith, conveying hence grain, fish, &c., and returning with merchants' goods. It is the station of a custom-house, whose district extends from Edesmouth to Largo bay. Branches respectively of the 'National Bank of Scotland'; and the 'Eastern Bank of Scotland', are settled here. The town is governed by three bailies, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors, elected under the Scotch Borough Reform Act. This burgh is united with St. Andrew's, Cupar, Crail, Kilrenny, Anstruther Wester, and Pittenweem, in returning one member to parliament. It is worthy of note, that Dr. Chalmers, the celebrated orator and divine, and professor Tennant, author of 'Anster Fair', were natives of this town.

ANSTRUTHER WESTER, which adjoins Anstruther Easter, is also a royal burgh, and holds its charter of incorporation from James VI. in 1587; a handsome bridge connects the two burghs. The inhabitants are principally employed in agricultural pursuits. Great improvements have been effected in this town within the last thirty years: among these must be noticed the widening of the main street from thirteen to thirty feet, its being macadamized, and the formation of a neat footway or pavement, at an expense of £450, contributed equally by the burgh and county; the place is now supplied with water, the streets well lighted, common sewers and other conveniences constructed, whereby the public thoroughfares and lanes are kept in a clean and orderly state; a new manse and offices for the clergyman; and a handsome school and dwelling-house for the schoolmaster, have also been erected. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday after the 11th April, July 5th, and November 12th.

The village of CELLARDYKES (or NETHER KILRENNY) is contiguous to Anstruther, before described. The greater number of the inhabitants are fishermen, and about one hundred and twenty boats belong to the place.

KILRENNY is a parish and royal burgh—the latter is situated one mile from Anstruther, and three from Crail. The parish approaches a circular form, having a diameter of about two miles. The coast here is one continued range of rocks, with two small creeks, which form the harbour of Kilrenny and the port of Cellardykes, or Nether Kilrenny; the harbour of the latter is capable of much improvement, and a hope is entertained of its future prosperity. Here is an established church and a parochial school. This burgh, in conjunction with the Anstruthers and other places before named, returns one member to parliament.

AUCHTERDERRAN, LOCHGELLY, KINGGLASSIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS,

AUCHTERDERRAN parish is four miles long and three broad. The soil is fertile, and only about a third is under tillage; the rest under pasture. The inhabitants, who assiduously apply themselves to agriculture, have much improved the condition and appearance of the district. A considerable bed of coal and ironstone traverses this parish.—LOCHGELLY which is the principal village in the parish, is 8 miles N.W.
from Kirkcaldy, and the same distance East from Dunfermline. A branch of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway passes close to the village; and adjoining are two furnaces for smelting the iron ore, which is here raised in abundance. The places of worship in this village, are a free church, and a presbyterian chapel; but the established church is at the hamlet of Auchterderran, two miles distant. Fairs for cattle are held on the third Wednesdays in July and September, and the first Thursday in November.

The parish of KINGLASSIE extends four miles in length, by two in breadth at its narrowest part and four at its broadest. It is watered by the Lochty and the Ore, tributary streams of the Leven. On the first of these stands the irregular village of Kinglassie, which is 2 miles from Le-lie, and 3½ N.E. from Loch-gelly. There are quarries of freestone, and the coal obtained in this parish is considered about the best in the county. The inhabitants of the village are principally supported by weaving. The places of worship are an established and a free church. A fair is entitled to be held on the third Wednesday in May.

AUCHTERMUCHTY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, signifying in Gaelic 'the Cottage of the King,' is a parish and a royal burgh—the latter 22 mils from Dundee, 19 from St. Andrews, 14 from Perth, 5 from Newburgh, and 3 from Collesie, a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway. It is situated on the road from Kinross to Cupar Fife, ten miles from the former and nine from the latter town. Auchtermuchty is irregularly built—many of the houses are thatched and low, but the greater proportion are of a superior appearance. There is a good substantial mansion house in the town, which was once the residence of the Thane of Fife. A stream of water called Loverspool runs through the town, dividing it into nearly two equal parts. This place was constituted a royal burgh by James IV, which charter was confirmed by James VI, and it still enjoys all the privileges arising therefrom, except that of parliamentary representation. It is governed by three bailies, fifteen councillors, a treasurer, and town clerk, and has a sheriff's small debt court, which is held quarterly. O. T. Bruce, Esq. of Grange and Falkland, is patron of the parish, and has become of late years a large proprietor in it. There is a castle on one of his estates, which was built by the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scotland. A considerable trade is carried on here in manufacturing linen and cotton goods for Dunfermline, Dundee, and Kirkcaldy houses, and this forms the principal business of the place. There are branches respectively of the Union Bank of Scotland, and the Western Bank of Scotland, and a bank for savings.

The places of worship comprise a church of the establishment, a free church, three united presbyterian chapels, and one for baptists. The parish church is an old structure, lately enlarged, and situated near the centre of the town. Schools are connected with the parish church and the free church, and there is one for infants. Fairs, April 5th, July 13th, and August 21st.

BURNTISLAND.

BURNTISLAND is a parish, a royal burgh, and a sea-port—the latter six miles from Kirkcaldy, and eight from Edinburgh. It is the terminus of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway, and is situated on the shore of the Frith of Forth, well sheltered by hills, which rise towards the north in an amphitheatrical form. The harbour is reckoned the best in the Frith, being both spacious and of a great depth of water; it has also an excellent dry dock; and a light-house stands on the entrance to the haven. The basin of the harbour was originally formed by Cromwell, whose dyke or wall, running from the foot of Rosem castle to the island, is still extant. From its being the terminus of the railway before mentioned, it has now become a place of considerable importance—the population in the course of the last six years being nearly doubled, and the revenue of the burgh increased three-fold. The town has been greatly indebted to Sir John Gladstone, Bart., of Fasque, through whose public spirit and enterprise a substantial and commodious low-water pier was erected, making Burntisland the ferry station between Fife and Midlothian. The pier, with the right of ferry, has been sold to the railway company who have stationed a number of excellent steamers on the passage. The company have also erected an ingenious apparatus by which they are enabled to run the railway tracks off the lines into the steamers without damage or displacement of the goods. From the excellent position of Burntisland as a seaport town—secure from almost every wind that blows, its excellent bathing ground, and its contiguity to Edinburgh, it has now become a fashionable summer residence—the main street and the surrounding walks presenting in the summer months a gay and animated appearance. To the east of the town are the links, much resorted to for golfing and promenading.

An arrangement was made with the railway company, by the officials of the burgh, regarding a commutation of customs and shore dues, whereby they secured to the town a revenue of £1,000 a year on railway traffic, they likewise bound themselves by act of parliament to expend two-thirds of this sum in deepening and improving the harbour; the railway company on their part agreeing to expend £25,000 in carrying the head of the harbour further into the sea. A substantial middle pier was lately run out into the harbour for the purpose of accommodating vessels of large tonnage. The town consists of one long main street with smaller diverging thoroughfares. Herring curing, cooperage and shipping of coal are the chief branches of trade. Messrs. Young & Co.'s distillery at Grange, about a mile from the town is celebrated for the purity of spirits manufactured there. A branch of the National Bank of Scotland was opened about six years ago. Sir John Gladstone has lately erected a number of handsome villas on the east of the links called Gladstone terrace. Lamerlaws, signifying 'hills on the sea,' a beautiful rising knoll commanding a splendid view of the Frith, and the city of Edinburgh is now covered with elegant villas and gardens. The town was constituted a royal burgh by James V. in 1541, and its magistracy consist of a provost, three bailies a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twenty-one councillors and in connexion with Dysart, Kirkcaldy and Kinghorn, it returns one member to the imperial parliament.

The places of worship are the parish church, the

CERES (or Cyrus), is a parish and village—the latter situated on an acclivity nearly three miles S.E. from Cupar Fife. The parish is eight miles long and from one to four in breadth; the surface is hilly, but in general is subject to agriculture. On the north it is bounded by Cupar parish, on the east is Cameron, on the south Largo, and on the west Cults. Flax spinning and weaving a few linen fabrics employ some of the inhabitants of the parish. The old house of Scotstarvet, once the family residence of the Scotts, one of whom wrote a remarkable little work entitled—'The Staggering State of Scots Statesmen,' is within the parish, and occupies a conspicuous situation on the top of the high grounds, which bound the house of Fife on the east. The house contains a museum of antiquities and curiosities. The parish church, which stands in an elevated situation, has a castellated square tower, which is seen at a considerable distance. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in March, the 24th June, and the 20th October.

The parish of KEMBACK is nearly of triangular figure, with its broadest side to the Eden, and measures about three and a half miles in breadth and length. It is one of the richest and most beautiful districts in the country; out of 1850 acres more than 1500 are fine arable land, and there are many fine plantations in different parts of the parish. Besides the Eden it is watered by the Ceres stream. The church stands about a mile and a half from Ceres village, and three from Cupar.

CRAIL, AND KINGSBARNs.

CRAIL is a parish, a royal burgh, and a sea-port—the latter 26 miles E. from Kirkcaldy, and 10 S.E. from Saint Andrews. It was anciently called Caryle or Cairraile, and is mentioned by old historians as a town of considerable note, so early as the middle of the ninth century; its importance in later days has, however, greatly declined, and notwithstanding it possesses great capabilities as a port, it enjoys but very little trade; this, in some measure, may be ascribed to the inconvenience of its harbour, for it is eligibly situated. Its principal exports consist of grain and potatoes: the imports are chiefly coals. Sixteen vessels belong to the port. The town consists of two streets, and two or three lanes; of the former one is broad and spacious, containing some good houses, several of which are of that massive and antique description which indicate past wealth. Crail was erected into a royal burgh by Robert Bruce; and it is governed by three bailies, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors: in conjunction with St. Andrews, Cupar Fife, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny and Pittenweem, it returns one member to Parliament. The parish church, a free church, and an united presbyterian chapel, are the places of worship. The celebrated James Sharp, archbishop of St. Andrews, was once minister of the church, and his hand-writing is still to be seen in the session records.

The parish of KINGSBARNs, lies in the eastern part of the county, with its eastern side to the German ocean—originally it formed part of Crail, but was separated from that parish in 1631. The village lies a mile to the south, on the public road round the coast, 6½ miles S.E. from St. Andrews, and 3¼ from Crail. It is a thriving little place, and carries on a considerable manufacture of linens for the Dundee market. The largest and best flag-stones in the country are obtained near the village, and marble of a fine quality is met with occasionally. A little to the east of the harbour are the fragments of a castle or palace, once the residence of David I., the remains of which consist chiefly of a wall, now partially enclosing a garden. Pitmilny, a very ancient seat, stands in the northern part of the parish. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in June, and the third Wednesday in October (old style.)

CUPAR FIFE AND DAIRSIE.

CUPAR (popularly designated CUPAR FIFE, to distinguish it from Cupar-Angus, on the borders of Perthshire,) is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of Cupar and of the county of Fife; 32 miles N. (by rail) from Edinburgh, 14½ S. from Dundee, 10 W. from St. Andrews, and the same distance N.E. from Falkland; pleasantly situated on the left bank of the Eden, and on the line of the Edinburgh and Dundee railway. It is a place of considerable antiquity, but in the present day its aspect is that of a modern thriving town nor are there any ancient remains to be discerned in or about Cupar. Of its castle, so frequently alluded to in Scottish history, not a vestige is now visible; the Castle-hill, where that fortress once stood (in which the plays of Sir David Lindsay, and the 'Satire of the Three Estates,' were acted in 1555), has been for some time occupied with schools; and the spot which once resounded with the clangour of arms is now devoted to learning. The principal streets of the town are the Crossgate, the Bonnygate, and St. Catherine-street, which last is built on the plan of the houses in the New Town of Edinburgh; in this street are the county buildings, the principal hotel, and news rooms, and library. Opposite the county buildings is an elegant episcopal chapel, in the Grecian style; its site is nearly that of a convent of Dominican or Black Friars, (in old records described as being situated to the east of the town). The streets and shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a company established in 1830. On the south side of the river is the old prison, said to resemble the gaol of Glasgow: it is not now used as a jail, a more commodious edifice having been erected, on rising ground a little to the north of the Dundee road. The principal trade of Cupar arises from the linen manufacture; but there are also other prosperous branches, as those of brewing, tanning, coach-making, &c., and of all the various necessary and domestic avocations a due proportion. There are four branch banks, — one of the 'British Linen Company,' the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Clydesdale Banking Company,' and the 'Western Bank of Scotland.' Two newspapers are published in Cupar weekly — the 'Herald,' on Thursday, and the 'Journal,' on Tuesday.

As a royal burgh, Cupar is governed by a provost, three bailies, and a dean of guild, with a treasurer and twenty-one councillors: in conjunction with St. Andrews, the Anstruthers, Crail, Kilrenny, and Pittenweem, the burgh returns one member to parliament. Being the county town and head burgh of the shire, the public business relating to both is transacted at Cupar; and here, consequently, reside a considerable number of practitioners before the courts of the shire. The ordinary sheriff court and the commissary courts are held every Tuesday and Thursday during session, and the sheriff small debts court on the first and third Tuesdays of each month during the same period.

The places of worship are the parish church, a chapel in connexion therewith, and others for the relief, united secession, original burgher, baptist, and episcopalian congregations. The schools of Cupar are of the best class, and are supplied with able teachers in all the useful branches of education; and a public library, well stocked with books in the various branches of literature and science, evidences the polished taste of the inhabitants. The weekly market a good one for corn is held on Tuesday; and a cattle market on the first Tuesday in every month.

DAIRSIE is a parish and village—the latter a small one, is situated on the main road from Cupar to Dundee, three miles from the former and eight from the latter town. The river Eden, which intersects the parish, is crossed by a good bridge of three arches, the erection of Archbishop Spotswood, who was the proprietor of the Dairsie estate. The church, which is in the Saxon style of architecture, and surmounted by a neat spire, was erected at the commencement of the seventeenth century. Dairsie castle, now a ruin, is noted as having been the residence of Archbishop Sharp, as well as the place where a parliament was called upon to assemble in the year 1335. Chapel well, in this parish, in high repute for the healing properties of its waters, is the site of a Roman Catholic chapel, of which no remains are visible. This parish is nearly three miles in extent each way; with little exception, the whole is fine arable land, and freestone and whinstone abound beneath its surface.

POST OFFICE, Cross-gate, CUPAR, Thomas Pratt, Post Master.—Letters from places SOUTH arrive (from EDINBURGH) every morning at a quarter-past nine and evening at a quarter before six, and are despatched thereto every morning at half-past six and afternoon at ten minutes before four.

Letters from DUNDEE, SAINT ANDREWS and the NORTH arrive every morning at twenty minutes before eight, and afternoon at half-past four, and are despatched every morning at ten minutes before nine, and evening at twenty minutes past five.

Letters from DAIRISIE, CERES, PITLESSIE and SPRINGFIELD arrive every afternoon at a quarter before four and are despatched at ten in the morning.

DUNFERMLINE

WITH THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF CROSSFORD, HALBEATH, TOWN HILL, WELLWOOD, SPITTAL, MILES MARK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNFERMLINE is a royal burgh and the seat of a presbytery—the capital of its parish, the chief town in the western part of Fife, and the most important in the scale of manufactures in the county: it is 16 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 47 N.E. from Glasgow, 31 S.W. from Cupar, and six from North Queen's-ferry; situate on rising ground, three miles north from the Firth of Forth, and three hundred feet above its level at Limekilns, the nearest part of the coast. Thus elevated, it commands a prospect remarkably various and beautiful, extending over fourteen different counties, and comprising a fine marine view on the east. A branch of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway comes to the town, and affords direct communication with nearly all parts of the county; a line connected with this branch effects a means of transit to Stirling and the west; whilst another line about 3 miles in length, hence to Charlestown, is used principally in the conveyance of coal for shipment at that port. At an early period Dunfermline became a royal residence: Malcolm

Canmore usually resided at a tower, or castle, built on a peninsulated hill in a valley near the town; a palace was afterwards erected not far from the tower, in a most romantic situation—the south-west wall still remains a monument of the magnificence of the fabric of which it formed a part. The monastery, one of the most ancient in Scotland, was founded by Malcolm Canmore for monks of the Benedictine order, and was completed by his son, Alexander I.: it continued to be governed by a prior till the reign of David I., who raised it to the dignity of an abbey, and, in 1124, translated thither thirteen monks from Canterbury. The abbey was richly endowed, and derived its revenues from very distant parts of the kingdom; it was an imposing and extensive building, but fell a sacrifice to the plundering army of Edward I., on his insidious intervention in the affairs of Scotland; about the commencement of the sixteenth century all that survived of this venerable pile was the church, with a few cells for the monks; these were demolished at the reformation.

The town consists of one principal street, stretching from east to west, with a number of smaller streets, crossing down-hill at right angles, or proceeding in a northerly direction. The houses along the leading thoroughfares are nearly all well built, and have somewhat of a metropolitan air: surveying the spires, and other eminent points in an external view of the place, it presents the contour of a venerable city. Within the last five-and-thirty years its size has been greatly increased, not only by the extension of the cross streets, but by the addition of a large suburb to the west; and during the last seven years the improvements effected have been considerable. The streets are gas-lighted by a company; and the town is abundantly supplied with excellent water, conveyed through pipes from the springs on the high ground, to the north of the town. Perhaps the most prominent public building in the town, if we except the edifices for religious purposes, is the Guildhall; it stands on the south side of the main street, and is constructed in the Grecian style, with a spire one hundred and thirty-two feet in height rising over the front. The town hall at the corner of Bridge and Kirkgate streets is likewise surmounted by a tower of considerable altitude: it contains the town clerk's offices, and a court room. The other public buildings comprise the prison, the workhouse, and fever hospital—all which have been built within the last few years, and occupy sites at the eastern extremity of the town. The burgh of Dunfermline, it appears, was held of the monastery, which formerly possessed paramount jurisdiction and exclusive privileges here, for nearly two centuries; and became royal by a charter from James VI., dated 24th May, 1588: in this document the monarch ratifies sundry charters, donations and indentures, by John and Robert, abbots of Dunfermline, particularly one dated the 10th of October, 1395, by which the abbot and convent renounce, in favour of the eldersmen and community, the whole income of the burgh belonging to their revenue, with the small customs, profits of court, &c., 'reserving, however, the power of punishment, should any of the magistrates be guilty of injustice in the exercise of their office.' In 1724 the burgh was placed on the footing it still maintains as respects its government, which is vested in a provost, two bailies and a dean of guild, together with a treasurer, a chamberlain and a town-clerk; the council is composed of twenty-two members, elected pursuant to the terms of the municipal Reform Act. The burgh joins with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross and Queen's-ferry in sending one member to parliament. Dunfermline is constituted the seat of a sheriff substitute for the western district of Fife: he holds a weekly court on Fridays during the session; and police and small debt courts are held every Wednesday, and over which the borough magistrates preside.

The constantly increasing population and prosperity of Dunfermline may be entirely ascribed to its manufacture of table linens—this branch took root in the town about the commencement of the last century; the cloth is woven of all dimensions, of the most elegant patterns, and to a greater extent than in any other town in Great Britain, and many firms are engaged in this business. There are two establishments for the spinning of linen yarn, and several large mills where steam-loom weaving is carried on. It is said that the chest of the incorporation of weavers contains two curious specimens of their art: a man's shirt wrought in the loom by a weaver of the name of Inglis, and a woman's shift, by another named Meldrum, both of which are without seam, and effected without the assistance of the needle; the only part which Inglis could not accomplish was a button for the neck. Exclusive of the linen trade, there are other branches of magnitude and importance—amongst which may be mentioned, iron and brass founding, and iron-forging, brewing, soap-boiling, dyeing and the manufacture of tobacco. The coal trade is very extensive, and large quantities of this article are annually exported. Four branch banks of the first respectability are established here, and a bank for savings. There are three principal inns and many other comfortable houses for public accommodation of lesser note. The parish abounds with valuable mines and minerals; in many places there are rocks of white freestone, and whinstone for paving the streets is in sufficient supply; limestone has been wrought very extensively, and ironstone is a plentiful article throughout this locality.

The parish church has been collegiate, and under the care of two ministers, since 1645. Of the other places of worship, their situations, and the respective officiating clergymen, will be found under a distinct head in a succeeding page. The secession church (now the united presbyterian) which has extended over the greater part of Great Britain, became conspicuous here at an early period of its history—the Rev. Ralph Erskine, one of the parochial clergymen of Dunfermline, being one of the four ministers who first seceded from the establishment in 1773, and shortly after founded Queen Ann-street church here, which, it is believed, was the first or second of that denomination. The most elegant building here of modern erection is the Abbey Church: it is of ornamental Gothic architecture, surmounted by a massive tower, one hundred feet high. The interior of the church is much admired. While excavating the foundation, the workmen discovered the tomb of that celebrated monarch, King Robert the Bruce, 490 years after his death: his remains were collected and enclosed in a leaden coffin and reinterred under the tower; adjoining the new is part of the old Abbey Church, where many other Scottish monarchs and nobles lie buried. The town and neighbourhood support many friendly societies. There are two superior schools, the 'Dunfermline grammar school,' and the 'Dunfermline academy'; also Lancasterian, infants' and sabbath schools, and several private academies; two public libraries, a subscription news room; mechanics' and scientific institutions; bible, tract, missionary, and other religious societies; a horticultural society, and various charitable associations.

The markets are held on Tuesday and Friday—the former principally for corn, which is disposed of by sample. Fairs, the third Tuesdays in January, March, April, June, July, September, October, and November.

DYSART,

AND PATH-HEAD, WITH SAINT CLAIRTOWN, GALLATOWN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DYSART is a parish and a royal and parliamentary burgh—the town is situated two miles from Kirkcaldy, on a gentle declivity towards the Firth of Forth. It consists of three streets, with a sort of square in the centre, where stands the town-house—a building at one period of much greater importance to the commercial uses of the town than it is at the present day. The central street contains many substantial houses, but of very antique appearances. The streets are gas-lighted by a company formed in 1843. So early as 1546, Dysart is mentioned as one of the principal trading towns on the coast of Fife, and was much noted for the manufacture and export of salt; the alteration in commerce consequent on the union of 1707, destroyed the ancient legitimate trade, which was succeeded by smuggling; and this contraband traffic, in its turn, has also been annihilated. The little trade it now enjoys is respectable, and consists in the weaving of ticks, checks, and similar fabrics, which employs a number of the inhabitants; there is also a flax spinning mill, and in the vicinity are mines of coal, ship-building is also carried on. The harbour is good, and there is a small floating dock, the only one of the kind on this part of the coast. Coal is the principal export. Dysart was created a royal burgh in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the original charter is lost; it is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and twenty-two councillors; and joins with Kirkcaldy, Kinghorn, and Burntisland, in returning one member to parliament. Parochial and infants' school, a news-room, and a mechanics' institute, are in the town. The most remarkable object of antiquity near the town is the castle of Ravenscraig, standing on a rock projecting into the sea; it was inhabited in Oliver Cromwell's time, and was assaulted by a party of his troops: it has for many years been deserted, and time has reduced it to a ruinous state. Dysart gives the title of earl to a branch of the Murrays of Tullibardine. The Earl of Roslyn has a seat in the neighbourhood. Fairs are held on the 6th of May, the third Tuesday in June, the fourth Wednesday in August, and on the 8th of November.

PATH-HEAD is a large village in the parish of Dysart, situated chiefly on the face of a hill, looking towards the Firth of Forth. It extends nearly to the town of Kirkcaldy, and is divided into three districts, respectively named PATH-HEAD, GALLATOWN and SAINT CLAIRTOWN. Dowlas, ticks, checks, &c. are manufactured by several establishments within the district; and in Path-head is a very extensive floor-cloth manufactory, belonging to Mr. Nairn—the only one of the kind in Scotland. The building in which this business is conducted is of great magnitude, and forms a conspicuous object from a distance, both to the traveller by railway and the sea voyager. The cloth is made here from half a yard to eight yards wide, and is generally kept ten months or so in the factory before sent into the market, that length of time being required to dry or season it. At Saint Clairtown is an earthenware manufactory. A commodious school-house was erected in Path-head some years since by the trustees of the late Robert Philp, Esq., of Kirkcaldy; and in 1949, an auxiliary parochial school was opened.

POST OFFICE, DYSART, Ann Pye, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from KIRKCALDY) every morning at half-past nine and evening at half-past seven, and are despatched thereto at ten in the morning, and eight in the evening.

POST OFFICE, PATH-HEAD, Robert Ross, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from KIRKCALDY) every morning at a quarter before nine, and evening at seven, and are despatched thereto at half-past six in the morning, and afternoon at four.

FALKLAND AND FRUCHIE.

FALKLAND is a parish—the small ancient town of its name is a burgh of barony, 25 miles N. from Edinburgh, 23 S. from Dundee, 15 S. E. from Perth, the same distance N. N. W. from Kinghorn, 10 S. W. from Cupar, 3 from Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo, and the same distance from the Falkland road station of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway. It is situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north side of the Lomond hills, which shelter it completely from the winds to the south. Falkland consists principally of one street, the eastern part of which is broad and spacious, but towards the west is narrow and inconvenient. The few good houses in the town are of an antique character, without any pretensions to architectural excellence. The palace is the only building worthy the notice of a stranger; this, for a long time was only ruin, but was rescued from total decay and repaired by the late Mr. Bruce, of the state-paper office. The excellence of the workmanship still delights the eye of the antiquarian, and gives an idea of what the building once was. The royal family of Scotland resided here occasionally; James V. died here in 1542. A dungeon is shown, in which it is said the Duke of Rothesay was starved to death by his uncle Albany. Tradition reports that this victim of oppression was supported for a length of time by two females, the wives of tradesmen of Falkland, one of whom supplied bread to him through a chink in the wall of the prison, while the other conveyed the milk from her breast by means of an oaten reed; being at length discovered, these supplies were cut off, and he perished of hunger. In 1715, it is said, the famous Rob Roy garrisoned the palace with a party of the Macgregors, and laid the country under heavy contributions for miles round, until at length he retired with a great booty.

The town was erected into a burgh by James II. in 1458, and its charter was confirmed and renewed by

POST OFFICE FALKLAND, Alexander Reidie, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at half-past nine, and evening at six, and are despatched at seven in the morning, and afternoon

James VI. in 1595, in order (in the words of the charter) to 'obviate the damage and inconvenience sustained, for want of inn-keepers and victuallers, by the many prelates, peers, barons, nobles and others of their subjects, who come to their country seats.' The magistracy consists of three bailies, a treasurer, a town clerk, and fourteen councillors. A town hall was erected in 1801, in which balls and other public assemblies take place. A large common, which belonged to Falkland, and on which the inhabitants had a right to turn their cattle, &c, has lately been divided among the heritors, and is nearly all enclosed. The chief occupation of the industrious class is weaving; and the product of their looms is consigned to a number of resident agents for manufacturing houses. The Lomond hills in this district are shaped like a cone, the eastern Lomond, which is the most regular and beautiful, is about 1650 feet above the level of the sea, and appears to have been fortified; the west Lomond is higher, and has on its top a large cairn or heap of loose stones.

The places of worship are, a new parish church, a free church, and a chapel for independents. The church was lately erected by O. T. Bruce, Esq., at an expense, it is said, of about £7,000; it is a handsome structure surmounted by an elegant spire. A new parochial school has also been established by the heritors. Fairs are held in the parish on the second Thursday in January; the last Thursdays in February, April and June; the first Thursday after the 12th of August, the fourth Thursday in September, and the first Thursday in November. The August fair is an extensive one for cattle, and is attended by many English dealers.

FRUCHIE is a village in the parish of, and about two miles east from Falkland; the inhabitants, like those of that town, are principally employed in weaving linen goods. A small flax mill, and a presbyterian chapel are in the village.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG, with NEWPORT, WOODHAVEN, FORGAN AND LEUCHARS.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG, or SOUTH FERRY.—This parish is five miles in length, by from half a mile to a mile in breadth—stretching along the sea, at the mouth of the Tay, where the land rises into a hilly range, extending westwards. The village is three miles from Dundee, seated at the base of the hills opposite to Broughty village. The Edinburgh and Dundee railway terminates here, and passengers are forwarded by steam-boat to Dundee and Broughty Ferry—both on the north bank of the Tay. For facilitating the shipping of goods, the railway company have constructed a dock and thrown out a pier; the latter can be approached by the steamers at all times of the tide. A great part of the village is composed of new houses, some of which are suited to the accommodation of visitors, who resort hither from the inland parts of the country for the benefit of sea-bathing—the beach here being naturally well formed for the purpose; but the chief support of the inhabitants is derived from the weaving of coarse linens, and from the salmon fishery, which is coextensive with the parish along the coast; the fish captured here are mostly sent to the London market. The 'Edinburgh and Glasgow Bank' have opened a branch here. The places of worship

FORGAN parish extends four miles in length by two in breadth, lying near the mouth of the Tay; having Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the east, Leuchars and Kilmenny on the south, and Balmerino on the west. The land generally declines to the Tay from an elevated back-ground, and is now well cultivated, inclosed, and beautifully wooded. On the shore is NEWPORT, where there is a small harbour and ferry-station opposite to Dundee. Recently some handsome villas have been erected on the slopes to the river, and a new road cut to Ferry-Port-on-Craig; like that village, Forgan has a constant communication maintained with the Dundee side by ferry. The Kirk of Forgan, which is situate inland, is about ten miles distant from Cupar, and the like distance from St. Andrews. About one mile west from Newport is the small harbour of WOODHAVEN.

LEUCHARS parish is nine miles in length by five in breadth; bounded on the east by the German ocean, and watered by the Eden on the south and south-west. The surface is level, and the soil tolerably fertile. There is an extensive distillery in the parish. The village of Leuchars is pleasantly situated about a mile from the coast, and six from St. Andrews, on the road from that town to Dundee. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in the linen manufacture. The Edinburgh and Dundee railway passes through the parish, and there is a station in the village. The church is very ancient, and considered one of the most perfect specimens of Saxon architecture in Scotland; it is supposed to have been erected in the twelfth century; there is also a free church in the parish.

INVERKEITHING.

WITH THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF NORTH QUEENSFERRY, SAINT DAVIDS, FORDEL, HILLEND, JAMES TOWN, ROSYTH, DALGETTY, CROSSGATES, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

INVERKEITHING is a royal burgh a sea-port and the capital of its parish; 14 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 31 S. from Perth, 13 S.W. from Kirkcaldy and four from Dunfermline—the last named place is the nearest railway station. It is most agreeably seated at the inner side of the bay of the Firth of Forth on an acclivity springing from the margin of the bay, and about two miles from North Queensferry, on the great road from Edinburgh to Perth, Aberdeen, &c. Its site commands an extensive view of the south bank of the Forth, with all that is grand and picturesque in the scenery of Mid-Lothian—Edinburgh, with its magnificently seated castle and fine buildings, lofty spires and tower monuments, bounds the eastern prospect, which is truly majestic when the morning sun beams on Arthur's Seat or Salisbury Craigs; while the passing and repassing of vessels on the river, and others lying at anchor, or moored in the harbour, add greatly to the beauty of the survey. So early as the days of David I, Inverkeithing was a royal residence, and received its charter of confirmation in the reign of William the Lion. There are many remains of antiquity, some of which are coeval with the earliest period of Scottish history. The old castle of Rosyth, the celebrated residence of Margaret, spouse of Malcolm Canmore, and subsequently of the Stuart family, still resists the fury of the storm, and rears its venerable head amidst the waters of the Forth: it is the property of the Earl of Hopetoun, whose noble mansion stands on the opposite shore, each gaining by the contrast—the one preserved in stately magnificence, the other a mighty skeleton.

The town consists chiefly of two streets, which are well paved and gas-lighted: lately improvements generally have been made and the thoroughfares now display some excellent and well furnished shops. There is a neat town-house which comprises a gaol and suitable apartments for the courts. The first existing charter of Inverkeithing is one from William the Lion, confirming one of earlier but unknown date; and a subsequent charter was conferred by James VI. in 1598. The government is vested in a provost or high sheriff, two bailiffs, a dean of guild and a treasurer, annually elected by the councillors. The expense of paving, lighting, the supply of water, &c., is defrayed from the corporation funds. The burgh in conjunction with Dunfermline, Stirling, Culross and Queen's Ferry, sends one member to the Imperial Parliament. Besides the usual trades found in a respectable country town, there are established here two iron-foundries, and a steam engine and boiler manufactory, and at the latter, iron vessels are constructed. Fire-bricks, tiles, and gas retorts are made extensively by two firms here; and tanning, rope making and ship-building, are other businesses—connected with the latter branch is a patent slip, of great use in repairing vessels. Coal, freestone and whinstone, are abundant in this neighbourhood and of excellent quality, and considerable quantities of each are annually exported. The harbour is capacious, and the bay is noted as a place of security in all winds. A branch of the 'Eastern Bank of Scotland' is established in Inverkeithing, affording great convenience to the monetary transactions of the commercial inhabitants.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and one for an united presbyterian congregation. There is a public school of the burgh in which the languages, mathematics and the usual branches of education are taught, and there are some private schools, of a respectable grade, and societies for the propagation of christianity. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in March, the third Thursdays in May and June, the first Friday in August, and the third Wednesday in October.

NORTH QUEENSFERRY, in the parish of Inverkeithing, is well known to travellers as the port and point of land opposite to Queensferry (or South Queensferry), in Linlithgowshire, and a steamer passes between the two every half-hour. A short distance to the west of the village is the anchorage ground, resorted to by vessels in stress of weather or contrary winds. Here is a station of the coast guard, and it is a fishing one for a kind of sprat, of which prodigious quantities are taken.

SAINT DAVIDS is a small port about a mile and a half to the east of Inverkeithing. The rise of this place may be mainly ascribed to the advantages it affords for the shipment of coal, brought from the extensive collieries at FORDEL by means of a railway five miles in length. At the pier, here, which has been extended at a cost of from £1,000. to £5,000., there is an average depth of eighteen feet at high water—being greater than that of any other port on this part of the coast, and will admit vessels of five-hundred tons to receive their cargoes at the pier; it is the property of George Mercer Henderson, E-q. Fire-brick and tile making and that of salt, are the only other branches carried on here.

HILLEND, JAMES TOWN and ROSYTH, are hamlets situated, from about a mile to a mile and a half from Inverkeithing. There is nothing worthy of particular remark attached to either.

DALGETTY is a parish and village lying to the east of Inverkeithing; this district is rich in coal, of which great quantities are exported from St. Davids.

CROSSGATES is a village in the parish of Inverkeithing four miles north from that town; situated about a quarter of a mile from a station on the branch of the Edinburgh and Dundee railway. The inhabitants are principally engaged in the collieries surrounding the village.

BALMALCOLM, PITLESSIE AND COLLESSIE.

KETTLE is a parish and village—the latter 17 miles
s. from Dundee, and four from Falkland, standing about a quarter of a mile off the main road from Edinburgh to Cupar, nearly six miles from the latter town
The Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway passes through the village, at which there is a station. The name of Kettle is of very obscure etymology; it was anciently called Katul, and in common phraseology it is invariably entitled 'the Kettle.' At one period the parish was denominated King's Kettle, from being the property of the crown. This district forms a large portion of that rich and beautiful territory on the north side of the Howe of Fife; it is exceedingly fertile throughout, with a slight exception. The river Eden bounds the parish on nearly the whole of its northern side. The inhabitants of the village are chiefly occupied in weaving. The church, which is a handsome building with a square tower, was erected in 1832. Besides the established church, there is a free church and an united presbyterian chapel. In this parish, about half a mile from the village is the hamlet of BALMALCOLM.

PITLESSIE is a small village in the parish of Cults, two miles from Kettle; situated on the road between

COLINSBURGH, ELIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of KILCONQUHAR lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, extending in an oblong form between seven and eight miles from north to south, and varying from two to nearly five miles in breadth. The surface rises from the south, and the soil varies gradually as it recedes from the coast. The flat part of the south is a sandy soil, the rest being all of an upland character. There are many beautiful seats in the parish, of which Balcarres, the residence of Colonel James Lindsay, is the chief; and there are other elegant mansions also deserving notice. Kilconquhar loch is a fine sheet of water, three quarters of a mile in length, and nearly the same in breadth, with two small islands, which harbour many swans and wild fowl. This parish contains four villages, namely, KILCONQUHAR, EARL'S FERRY (a royal burgh), BARNYARDS, and COLINSBURGH. The latter which is the principal village, is 17 miles from Kirkcaldy, 11 from Cupar, the like distance from St. Andrews, four from Largo, and one from Kilconquhar and Barnyards villages. Colinsburgh is a thriving little village, of some trade, having a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, a good inn, and several well-furnished shops. Besides the parish church, there is an united presbyterian chapel at Kilconquhar, and one of the latter at Colinsburgh. At that village a weekly corn market is held on Thursday, and fairs on the second Wednesday in March, and the second Fridays in June and October: at Kilconquhar a fair is held on the 14th May, and one on the 8th of November.

ELIE is a small parish, being only about a square mile in extent, bounded on the north and west by Kilconquhar, and on the east by St. Monance, lying on the coast of the Frith of Forth. The whole, which is enclosed, is the property of Sir W. Anstruther, who has here an elegant residence. The village of Elie is six miles E. of Largo, one mile and a half from Kilconquhar, two and a half from Colinsburgh, and the same distance from St. Monance. It stands so near the sea, that the waves wash the walls of some of the houses. The harbour is said to be the deepest in the Frith of Forth, except that of Burntisland. The beach is here very fine and sandy; and the bathing being excellent, many persons resort here in the summer, but at other times it is destitute of attraction, although at some earlier period it must have been a place of more importance than it now is; for in one of the streets near the sea there are some substantial ancient residences, evidently once the habitation of families of distinction. The trade of the place is confined to the weaving a few ticks and checks for distant houses, and the export of grain and potatoes.

POST OFFICE, COLINSBURGH, Elizabeth Ronald, Post Mistress. Letters from all parts arrive daily, at twelve, noon, and are despatched at seven in the evening.

KINGHORN, PETTY-CUR, AUCHTERTOUL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KINGHORN is a town of considerable antiquity, and a royal burgh; three miles and a half from Kirkcaldy, and two and a half from Burntisland; occupying a pleasant situation on the side of a hill, sloping to the Frith of Forth, and exactly opposite to Leith, and on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway. It consists principally of one main street, intersected by others of minor importance. An elegant edifice was erected some years ago, answering the purpose of a town house and goal. Another public erection, worthy of notice, is a handsome new school house; it contains school rooms for infants and for females, a common school room, and a library and museum. Kinghorn was invested with the privileges of a royal burgh by King David I., and about that time it is said to have been a royal residence. The government of the burgh is vested in five managers, a treasurer, town clerk, &c. The courts formerly held here have been transferred to Kirkcaldy. The burgh in conjunction with those of Dysart, Kirkcaldy, and Burntisland, returns one member to parliament. The principal business carried on here is flax spinning, for which Messrs. Swan Brothers have two mills—one here, the other at Kirkcaldy; they have likewise a large and powerful corn-mill. A brewery, a tannery, and the manufacture of glue are the other notable branches. The harbour has fallen to decay, and the nearest, now, is about half a mile distant, at Petty-Cur, which for many years was the ferry-place for Edinburgh, now transferred to Burntisland. The island of Inchkeith, distant about three miles from Petty-cur, has the appearance of a barren rock; on visiting it, however, both arable and pasture lands are discovered. It also contains a small harbour and a light-house, for the security of vessels sailing up the Frith. About a mile to the eastward is the workhouse, occupying a commanding situation near the coast. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church, and a united presbyterian chapel; and the educational institutions are a school connected with the free church; and for infants, and 'Philip's Institution.'

AUCHTERTOUL, a small inland parish, about two miles in length and one in breadth; the situation is elevated, and commands an extensive prospect. From a little lake, called Camilla loch, the river Teel takes its rise; on the verge of the loch are the ruins of Camilla Castle, or 'Hall-yards.' The parish contains a small village, of the same name, which is about four miles west of Kirkcaldy. Auchterteel is said to have been the original name of the parish, deriving the appellation from its situation on the banks of the Teel

POST OFFICE, KINGHORN, James Greig, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at eight, and afternoon-half-past five, and are despatched thereto, morning at half-past eight and afternoon at half-past five.

KIRKCALDY WITH ABBOTSHALL,
AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KIRKCALDY is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, a populous thriving sea-port, and the capital of its parish; 14 miles N. from Edinburgh, 33 S. W. from Dundee, and 6 from Burntisland—(all rail distances), on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee lines, the station of which is contiguous to the town. It is situated on the northern shore of the Firth of Forth, and stretches along the base of a range of rising grounds to the extent of about a mile. From the narrow dimensions of the site on which the town stands, the inhabitants have from the first been necessitated to build their habitations in a continuous line along the shore, though without much regard to the regularity of their structure; and having thence elongated most disproportionately, the place from an early period has been styled 'the lang town o' Kirkcaldy,' in familiar allusion to its appearance. Though formerly limited to this long street, and a few diverging narrow lines, houses were in time erected on the ascent behind, or near to the shore in front; and it now comprises several well-built cross streets, and a variety of detached dwellings, the residences of the more opulent classes: so that, when viewed from the sea, the town appears environed by finely enclosed productive fields, ornamented by the beautiful grounds and conspicuous tower of Raith, (the residence of Robert Ferguson, Esq. M.P. for the burgh), and the verdant plantations surrounding the elegant mansion of Donniskirk, the seat of James T. Oswald, Esq. The prospect from the heights is of a different character, but equally delightful—embracing, as it does, the town and landscape immediately beneath and around, with a view of the busy waters of the Firth of Forth, agitated by a constant succession of vessels sailing to and fro upon its bosom.

From a remote date the town of Kirkcaldy has sustained great vicissitudes and fluctuations in its commerce and prosperity. When Charles I. erected it anew into a royal burgh, it had, according to tradition, one hundred ships belonging to it, and ranked as the sixth place of maritime importance in Scotland; but, in 1673, the number of vessels in its possession had decreased to twenty-five; and in 1682 its distress was so deplorable, that an application was made to the convention of burghs to consider its poverty, and to take measures for relieving it as to its public burdens. On the return of peace, in 1763, the trade to the port revived and the quantity of shipping consequently increased and progressively augmented, so that in 1792 it boasted twenty-six vessels; from this period, Kirkcaldy has gradually risen into repute, both as a port and a manufacturing town. The number of vessels belonging to the port at the present time is seventy-four of an aggregate burthen of 9,956 tons. The principal importation are flax and grain. Vessels from this port have been employed in the Davis Straits whle-fishery for many years, and their are two vessels at the present time engaged on that trade. A branch rail from the main line traverses the entire length of the harbour—a great convenience to operations of loading and unloading vessels. The pier of late years has been run out three hundred feet—a vast improvement, and the erection of another pier is contemplated. The average depth of water is twelve feet at eap tides, and eighteen at spring tides. This port is the seat of a custom-house having control over a line of coast extending from Aberdour on the west to Saint Andrews on the east. The prominent trade of Kirkcaldy bears an intimate affinity with that of Dundee, consisting of the spinning of flax and the weaving of coarse linen goods, for home and foreign consumption; striped holland, dowlas, ticks, checks, sailcloths, &c., are amongst the fabrics produced from the looms of this town; the other branches include a large floor cloth manufactory, brewing, ironfounding, machine making, and a considerable corn and meal trade. The general commerce of the place is assisted by resident branches of four banking establishments, namely, the 'National Bank of Scotland,' the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Bank of Scotland,' and the 'Union Bank of Scotland.' There are now many elegant shops, with extensive stocks of fashionable, ornamental, and useful goods; and several excellent inns—amongst these 'Philp's Commercial and Temperance Hotel,' is noted for its comfort.

The civic government of the town is confided to a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer;

the council consists of twenty-one members. The burgh is conjoined with Kinghorn, Dysart and Burntisland in sending one member to parliament. In 1829 was completed, and has superseded the old town-house, a handsome building of large dimensions, containing a hall for burgh and district meetings; a burgh court, and record rooms; an office for the town clerk, and other apartments, together with a goal. The sheriff holds his circuit courts here on the first Friday of every alternate month, under the small debts' act; and the justices of the peace, likewise sit on the first Monday monthly for adjudicating claims under other pecuniary acts.

The church which is in the Gothic style, stands on an eminence above and at the back of the town; the other places of worship are a free church, and chapels for united presbyterians, baptists and independents. The principal educational establishments besides the parochial or burgh school, (a handsome building erected in 1844), is Philip's institution for instructing children of both sexes, selected from among those of the poorest inhabitants; in connexion with this charity there are schools at Path-head, Abbots Hall, and Kinghorn. The property bequeathed by Mr. Philip for erecting and sustaining schools in these places is estimated at nearly £70,000. In virtue of this munificent endowment, a schoolhouse was erected in Thistle st., at an expense of £2,400, it is a neat building in the Grecian style; and others have been erected in different localities. The pupils are admitted between the ages of six and fifteen, and are taught only the plainest elementary branches; thirty shillings per annum is allowed for clothing each pupil. The inhabitants of this respectable town support reading rooms and a mechanics' institution; there is besides a well selected circulating library at Mr. Crawford's, bookseller, in the High-street; and a newspaper called the 'Advertiser', is published here every fortnight. The market which is held on Saturday is a large one for grain; this article is sold both by sample and in bulk. Fairs on the third Fridays in February, April, and July, and the first Friday in October.

ABBOTSHALL although a distinct parish, may be said to form almost an integral part of Kirkcaldy, for its principal street called the Links, (nearly a mile long), runs west in a direct line with the High-street of the town named. The trade and manufactures are of the same character as those of Kirkcaldy; and more immediately in Abbotshall are three breweries, dye works, an earthenware manufactory, and a large corn mill. The places of worship are established and free churches; and the schools are parochial, 'Philip's institution', and several private respectable academies. The general appearance of the parish, the extent of which is about two miles either way, is very agreeable, rising gradually from the coast northward into tolerably high grounds. Raith House, before noticed, is in this parish.

LARGO, (UPPER AND NETHER.)

LARGO parish lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, betwixt Newburn and Kilconquhar on the east, and Leven on the west—its inland quarter being bounded by Ceres. The parish contains two villages, one called UPPER (or KIRKTOWN of) LARGO, the other NETHER LARGO: the former is situated a mile from the sea on the road leading from Leven to Anstruther—three miles from the former, 10 from the latter, 13 from St. Andrews, 9 from Cupar, and 10 and a half from Dysart, the nearest railway station. In Upper Largo, which is a very agreeable little village, stands the parish church, an ancient Gothic fabric, with a spire rising from the centre. This was the birth-place of the celebrated Scottish admiral, Sir Andrew Wood, who, in the reign of James IV., defeated the English fleet under Stephen Bull. A hospital, which stands in the village, was erected by means of an endowment by a Mr. John Wood, a native of the place; it is a handsome building, in the Gothic style: the intention of the founder was of a peculiar nature—any man 'of the name of Wood' may have admission here, to whatever part of Great Britain he may belong: the foundation provides the inmates with beds and bedding, the produce of the gardens, and £15 per annum.

LESLIE

LES is a burgh of barony, and manufacturing town, 12 miles E. from Kinross, the like distance S.W. from Cupar, nine N.W. from Kirkcaldy, and three west from Markinch, a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway. It is seated along the summit of a ridge of ground rising from the Leven on the southern and a shallow vale on the northern side, and situated on the public road up the vale of Leven, leading into Kinross-shire. It consists principally of one street, running from east to west; the steps to the upper flats are on the outside of some of the houses, which is a great inconvenience to foot-passengers; many of them, however, have been removed of late years. It is a very ancient place; of this the irregularity of the streets, and the architecture of the houses (being built with the gable end to the street), are proofs. Nearly all the dwellings are provided with gardens behind, and the environs display much rural beauty—the streets of the town are gas-lighted. At the eastern entrance to the town is a pleasant public 'green,' of a triangular figure, in former times this area was the scene of various pastimes, and the place of annual meeting of the pedlars or packmen of Scotland. Many improvements have been made in the burgh within the last fifty years, and during that period its size has been nearly doubled—this vast increase is attributable to the prosperity of its manufactures, consisting of linens and woollens, flax spinning, paper-making and bleaching: the works of these are chiefly established on the banks of the Leven—where also are corn mills. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland was opened here in 1850; and there is a savings' bank. Leslie is governed by two bailies and some councillors: the Earl of Rothes, who is superior of the burgh, has a seat. 'Leslie House,' at the eastern end of the town; around the mansion are some fine pleasure grounds and agreeable plantations.

The places of worship are the parish church, a plain structure with a spire; a free church and two presbyterian chapels; there are three or four public schools in the parish and a private one. The inhabitants of Leslie have for years taken pride to themselves for their upright dealings—as a proof of which they adduce the fact, that no writer (lawyer) is to be found in the town. Fairs are held here on the first Tuesday in April, the Wednesday next before Michaelmas (old style), and on the first Friday in October.

POST OFFICE, Alexander Easton, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from KIRKCALDY) every morning at half-past ten, and evening at half-past seven, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past six in the morning, and afternoon at ten minutes past three.

LEVEN WITH DUBBIESIDE,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LEVEN is a considerable village, or rather town, in the parish of Scoonie; nine miles from Kirkcaldy, four from Wemyss, and three from Largo, and seven from Dysart—the last named being the nearest railway station—situate on the coast of the Frith of Forth, at the mouth of the river Leven, from which the place takes its name. The town consists of three principal streets, irregularly built, but contains some good houses; with several lanes and detached mansions. The harbour is of limited dimensions, and but few vessels can approach the quay at the same time. The principal imports are flax and tow. Of late years the town has been considerably improved, and its trade materially augmented; so that Leven may now be pronounced one of the most thriving of the small towns in the county of Fife. Over the Leven, and connecting this town with the village of DUBBIESIDE, is a handsome stone bridge. The staple trade of Leven is the preparation and spinning of flax, and the weaving of linens; the mills of the former, especially, employing a considerable number of hands. The Durie iron-foundry, a concern long established, is very extensive, and produces specimens of work that may compete with any of a similar kind in Scotland; the proprietors of these works, MESSRS. Balfour and Co., manufacture both for the home trade and exportation. A distillery belonging to Messrs. Haig and Co., a bone-dust mill, corn mills, bleach fields, the manufacture of bricks and tiles, and rope and herring twine are the other leading branches carried on here and in the vicinity. There are two branch banking houses, and several fire and life agency offices. During the summer months, Leven is the resort of a number of respectable families from the interior, for the benefit of sea-bathing; and at the same season there is a daily communication with Largo, Dy-art, and Newhaven, by means of steam-vessels. Crawford's Hotel, the principal of the kind, has been lately enlarged, and greatly improved; it now affords superior accommodation either to families or commercial gentlemen. The town is governed by a baron baillie (appointed by Charles M. Christie, Esq. of Durie), before whom petty offences are tried; and the sheriff's small debt court is held here on the second Friday of March, the first Friday of June, and the last Fridays in the months of August and November.

The parish church of Scoonie, which is one of the plainest in the shire, stands close to the town; a free church, and pre-byterian and independent chapels are the other places of worship. A free church school, and a parochial one, with some private academies are the educational establishments. Between the decayed town of Metilil and the mouth of the Leven, there are some fine open downs, on which a golfing society exercise their healthful amusement, and annually play for a gold and silver medal. Fairs, the second Wednesday in April, the first Wednesday in July, and the third Wednesday in October.

LIMEKILNS with BRUCEHAVEN is a small sea-port, in the parish of Dunfermline, three miles south of that town, situated on the north bank of the Frith of Forth.
It was at one period a place of considerable trade, but at the present day its excellent harbour is chiefly made use of for the mooring of vessels. Ship building is carried on at Brucehaven ship-yard, and many beautiful clipper-built vessels have been launched here. There is also a large brewery and soda water manufactory.
Several owners of vessels, employed in the coasting trade, reside here; and there is an association for the insurance of vessels. A congregation of united presbyterians have a chapel here.

A short distance from Limekilns is the village and port of CHARLESTOWN, the property of the Earl of Elgin, who has formed a commodious harbour and pier, and built residences for the men employed at his extensive lime works in the vicinity: from hence enormous quantities of limestone are exported annually; it is likewise the shipping port for the Elgin and Wellwood collieries. The accommodations found at the harbour here, for loading and unloading vessels, are most excellent. A manufactory for salt, an iron foundry, a fire-brick work, a steam saw mill and timber yard, are among the other business of this flourishing little place.

MARKINCH, KENNOWAY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MARKINCH is a parish and village—the latter, a station on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway, is situated near the centre of the parish, at the distance of 10 miles s. from Cupar, and 8 n.e. from Kirkcaldy: it occupies an open situation, on a piece of irregular rising ground; and on the highest part of the eminence is seated the church. Weaving of linen is the principal employment of the inhabitants; in the neighbourhood are paper, flax, and corn mills, a woollen manufactory, and bleach-fields, and the district around furnishes coal in abundance. The places of worship comprises a church of the establishment, a free church and a chapel for the united presbyterians—with the first and last-named, schools are connected.

The parish of Markinch is bounded by Kennoway on the east; on the west by Dysart, Kinglassie, and Leslie; on the north by Falkland and Kettle, and on the south by Wemyss; it extends from north to south five miles and a half, by a mean breadth of two, its southern end being considerably wider. The parish has a general slope towards the south; it is under the best state of cultivation, enclosure, and plantation—and must be ranked amongst the most beautiful parts of this shire: it is traversed by the streams of the Leven and the Or, and the great road through the county crosses it. The railway is carried over the first-named river by means of a handsome viaduct of ten arches, nearly ninety feet in height. The parish contains Balgonie Castle, one of the seats of the Earl of Leven, and from whence his eldest son takes the title of baron: the castle is an edifice of great antiquity and strength; it stands on the south bank of the Leven, in the midst of some fine woods. About half a mile to the east is the castle of Balfour, surrounded by pleasing plantations and enclosures; and in a delightful situation is the house (or castle) of Balbirnie, a good substantial mansion.

KENNOWAY parish, which lies to the east of Markinch, is three miles long and two broad, situated on an acclivity rising from the south to the north. It commands a delightful and extensive prospect, from its southern side, of the Firth of Forth, its islands, and the Lothians; while, from the northern extremity, the view extends over the greater part of the counties of Fife, Angus and Perth, and includes the Grampian mountains. The village of Kennoway is situated about three miles from that of Markinch, at the head of a beautiful and romantic glen, the sides of which are precipitous and rocky, and contain caves, which were probably used as places of refuge, or retreat for marauders, in ancient times. There are two annual

NEWBURGH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABBIE, BALMERINO AND CRIECH.

NEWBURGH is a royal burgh, sea-port and the capital of its parish, 15 miles s.w. from Dundee, 11 s.e. from Perth, 10 n.w. from Cupar, and 5 n. from Auchtermuchty, situated on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway, and on the south bank of the Tay. It consists of one long street in the direction of east and west, parallel with the course of the river, and a lane or two leading towards the shore, where there are convenient quays for the shipping of merchandise, and a spacious harbour; the Tay above, being navigable only for vessels of about two hundred tons; those of greater burthen put in here to discharge their cargoes, which are sent to Perth by lighters. That the town is of considerable antiquity is unquestionable; according to some authorities, its origin is ascribed to the fostering patronage of the adjacent abbey, and the name of New-burgh supposed to have been conferred upon it in contradistinction to the ancient decayed burgh of Abernethy, which lies about two miles to the west. Formerly the greater proportion of the habitations were low-built and roofed with thatch, but of late years a better style of architecture has prevailed, and there are now many good houses. The town hall, which stands near the centre of the town, is a neat modern building; and the church, nearly opposite to it, is a handsome new edifice.

At an early period the town was erected into a burgh of regality, and in 1631 Charles I. granted to the place a charter, forming the community into a royal burgh; in virtue of which grant Newburgh sent a commissioner to the Scottish estates, but being unable to pay his expenses, which was then the custom, the burgh, upon petition, was relieved from the burden of parliamentary distinction, and it has never since been oppressed by representative honors. The government is vested in two bailies and fifteen councillors, with a treasurer and a town clerk. Within the last forty or fifty years Newburgh has risen very considerably in wealth and outward appearance, through the industrious habits of its population, and the traffic carried on at its port. The manufacture of linen goods may be considered the staple of the place, exclusive of which the trade in corn and timber is by no means inconsiderable; of the former especially, large exports are made. To the parish of Newburgh many interesting particulars belong, which our confined space will not allow us to notice, but which the reader will find amply detailed in Messrs. Chambers' excellent Gazetteer. Fairs are held on the third Friday in June, and on the 5th of December.

ABBIE parish, which is of considerable extent, but greatly intersected by other parishes, lies on the south bank of the river Tay, amongst those highlands to the westward, which have acquired the appellation of the Ochill hills. The surface is remarkably uneven, but the soil is in general fertile. It possesses three quarries of granite, of which considerable quantities are shipped for paving the streets of London. The parish is well watered with lochs, the chief of which is the lake of Lindores, about a mile in length, and of irregular breadth. This piece of water is well stored with fish, and being surrounded by some romantic scenery, is, a beautiful object in the view of the country.

BALMERINO or Balmerinloch (pronounced Ba'mirnie) is a parish lying on the south bank of the river Tay, extending, on an average, about  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles in length, and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  in breadth. The surface is a gradual decline to the side of the river. The harbour of Balmerino is small, but a considerable quantity of grain is annually exported from it. The kirk and little hamlet lie on the road along the high ground, from the ferry opposite Dundee, to Newburgh. To the west, and on a slip of ground intruding upon the waters of the Tay, stands the ancient village of Balmerino, adjacent to which are the ruins of the once famed abbey—a beautiful structure, begun by Alexander II. and his mother, Emergarde, daughter of the Earl of Beaumont, in 1229. These ruins, which are richly clothed with ivy, and surrounded with some fine tall trees, are much admired by strangers.

CRIECH parish is about three miles in length, and two in breadth. Its surface is nearly level, and the soil sandy and thin; but agriculture is making rapid improvements. On a little eminence near the church are the vestiges of a Roman camp, and at a short distance therefrom are the remains of a castle, which formerly belonged to Cardinal Beaton. This parish was the birth place of the Rev. John Sae, the first of the post-revolution bishops in the Scottish episcopal communion, and the author of that very remarkable production, the 'Fundamental Charter of Presbytery.'

POST OFFICE, NEWBURGH, Joseph M. Sharpe, Post Master.—Letters from parts SOUTH arrive (from EDINBURGH) every morning at nine, and are despatched thereto at twenty minutes past six in the evening.

Letters from parts NORTH arrive (from PERTH) every morning at twenty-five minutes past nine, and are despatched thereto at five minutes past five in the evening.

PITTENWEEM AND ST. MONANCE.

PITTENWEEM is a royal burgh and sea-port, in the parish of its name; 24 miles N.E. from Edinburgh, 21 s.w. from Kirkcaldy, 5 s.w. from Crail, and 10 s. from St. Andrews (the last named the nearest railway station); situated on the coast of the Firth of Forth, one mile from Wester Anstruther, and occupying rather an elevated site of ground above the harbour. It consists of an irregular main street, with a few bye thorough-fares, the houses generally bearing an ancient aspect. The dwellings around the harbour are of a respectable appearance; and over this part of the town stand the remains of the priory of Pittenweem, the date of which is not with certainty known; exclusive of some fragments of the religious edifice, there is a quadrangular range of curious antique buildings entire, said to have been the residence of the prior, and other superior officers of the establishment. These remains exhibit a fine specimen of the domestic ecclesiastical architecture of the ages anterior to the Reformation; they are included within the private property of the Rev. Dr. Low, a bishop of the episcopal church of Scotland, who here superintends a congregation of that communion, and resides in one of these venerable structures. Adjacent to the monastic ruins stands the parish church, an old edifice with a turretted spire.

Pittenweem was constituted a royal burgh by James V. in 1537; it is governed by four bailies, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors; and joins with Cupar, St. Andrews, the Anstruthers, Crail, and Kilenrenny, in sending one member to parliament. Between the period of Pittenweem being erected into a royal burgh and 1639, it should seem that it was a place of considerable note and trade; but, from the latter period to the year 1645, it suffered severely—no fewer than thirteen sail of large vessels, belonging to this port, having been either taken by the enemy or wrecked. It is now a fishing station of some importance; and fish curing is carried on rather extensively, in addition to which the trade in grain is of some consequence.

The places of worship are the parish church, and episcopalian and united presbyterian chapels. It was at Pittenweem that the robbery was committed upon the collector of the excise by Wilson and Robertson, which led to the outrages of the Porteous mob and the consequent catastrophe: the house in which this transaction took place is still standing, on the south side of the street, west of the town house.

The village or small town of ST. MONANCE (or St. Monans) is one mile and a half from Pittenweem, on the same coast as the latter place. There is a small harbour attached to it, and at one period it was ranked amongst the most considerable fishing stations on the coast of Fife, and its inhabitants still pursue that avocation. St. Monance is a burgh of barony, governed by three bailies, a treasurer, and twelve councillors. Lying away from the direct thoroughfare along the shore of the Forth, it is comparatively seldom visited, and is, therefore, only locally known. From the adjacent country its little church alone is visible, standing on the height above the houses, and so near to the sea as to be occasionally wet with its foam; it is a curious old Gothic edifice. Until the year 1646, the name of the parish was Abercrombie, or Invernry; its present name is derived from St. Monan, a martyr celebrated for his miracles in Fife and the adjacent Isle of May.

ST. ANDREWS

As a city, a royal burgh, and sea port—and perhaps the most interesting town, as regards its ecclesiastical history, in North Britain; 39 miles N.E. of Edinburgh, 10 miles from Cupar, Anstruther and Crail, and six from Leuchars, a station on the Edinburgh and Dundee railway. It stands within the bay to which it gives name—wherein flow the river Eden, and a small stream called the Kiniey. Its history is mingled with the civil and ecclesiastical annals of Scotland, especially the latter; but the narrow space within which the proprietor of this work is confined, in the descriptive notice of towns, denies to him the gratifying task of performing that ample justice to these subjects which their importance demands, and which have been so ably and elaborately treated by the authors of the 'Gazetteer of Scotland.'

The city of St. Andrews in 1410 first saw the establishment of its university, which was the earliest of the kind in Scotland—it originated with Bishop Wardlaw, a magnificent and liberal minded prelate; in 1411 it was endowed by a charter. The college of St. Salvator was erected by Bishop Kennedy in 1456, that of St. Leonard in 1512, and that of St. Mary, or the divinity college, in 1537; in 1747 the institutions of St. Salvator and St. Leonard were united, by parliamentary statute. The university library contains upwards of fifty-three thousand volumes. The united college has a chancellor, a rector, and principal; with professors of Greek, logic, natural philosophy, moral philosophy, humanity, civil history, mathematics, and natural history. The college of St. Mary's is an institution of less consequence, it consists of a principal, and professors of divinity, church history, and oriental languages. The site of the new Madras college is on the south side of the South-street, immediately behind and comprehending within it part of that fine old ruin the Black Friars, which will thus be associated with an improved system of education for centuries to come—uniting, tastefully and appropriately, something of the splendour of departed with much of the elegance and usefulness of present times. This noble institution, which was endowed by the late Dr. Bell, the distinguished founder of several similar establishments, both in this and in other towns of Scotland, cannot fail to secure to his memory, for ages to come, that veneration and esteem to which, as a benefactor of his race, he is so well entitled. The architectural plan was made by

The town originally consisted of four streets: Swallow-street (which has for centuries disappeared), towards the sea; North-street, in which a number of elegant edifices are now erected, together with the buildings of the united college, partly old and partly new; Market-street, which runs through the middle of the town, and is formed by a town-house and gaol which occupy its centre, like the late 'Heart of Midlothian' in Edinburgh; and South-street, which is spacious and well-paved, terminating towards the east in a beautiful view of the ruins of the cathedral, and towards the west in a fine arched entrance, being the old city gate. The streets all concentrate towards the old cathedral, and the still more ancient tower of Regulus, or, as it is more commonly called, 'St. Rule.' In this quarter still stands a great part of the magnificent wall reared by Prior John Hepburn in 1516: it runs along the south side of the town, and contains fourteen round and square towers, each having a niche on the outside for a saint; and appears one of the most interesting relics in the place. From the top of St. Regulus' tower there is a beautiful view of the Bell rock, the bay, the city, and the surrounding country. The ruins, rapidly decreasing, of the once formidable castle, the scene of Cardinal Beaton's cruelty to others and of his own assassination, lie towards the north-east and jut out into the sea, while in another century will probably sweep them from the face of the earth. On the shore is a small eminence called the Witch-hill, the place where those convicted of witchcraft suffered. Near this spot is a monument raised in 1842 to the memory of the martyrs—Wishart, Mill and others; it is in the form of an obelisk, and is forty-five feet in height.

As before stated, St. Andrews is a royal burgh, by virtue of a charter conferred by David I, which was confirmed by Malcolm II, the unfortunate monarch who was slain at Glamis castle in 1034; the charter, together with the silver keys of the city, and the axe which was used for the decapitation of Sir Robert Spottiswoode and some other loyalists, are still to be seen in the town house. The city is governed by a provost (elected triennially), a dean of guild and four bailiies, with a treasurer. The burgh unites with Cupar, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny, Pittenweem and Crail, in sending one member to the imperial parliament. Saint Andrews enjoyed at one period an extensive foreign trade, and so lately as the reign of Charles I. it owned from thirty to forty trading vessels. At present the chief trade is in coal, and the number of vessels is ten, of an aggregate burthen of 550 tons. The harbour is small; the water is seven feet at ordinary tides, and fourteen at spring. A company, called the Saint Andrews Railway Company has lately been formed for the purpose of laying down a railway to join the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee line at a point near Milton, in the parish of Leuchars. The branch will be five miles, and the estimated cost about £15,000. Four banking establishments are in useful operation here, namely—branches respectively of the 'Edinburgh and Glasgow Bank'; of the 'Clydesdale Banking Company'; of the 'Western Bank of Scotland'; and of the 'Bank of Scotland.' There are three principal inns—of these the Royal Hotel, in South-street, a family, commercial and posting establishment will be found in every department it professes, to afford comfort and satisfaction to its visitants.

Nearly opposite St. Mary's college, on the north side of the street, stands the Town church, erected in the twelfth century; it is in good preservation and repair, and is crowded with seats and galleries: within the door, and on the right side, is the superb monument of Archbishop Sharp, erected by his son in 1769; it is composed of white marble; the figure of the prelate is represented in the attitude of kneeling, and below is exhibited, in relief, the assassination of this ecclesiastical dignitary. It was thoroughly repaired in 1850 at an expense of upwards of £100. Besides the two parish churches, an additional one has lately been erected, there are also a free church, and episcopal, united presbyterian, baptist, and independent chapels. A gilding society was instituted here in 1754; it has always been well sustained by its respectable members, who number between three hundred and four hundred; they hold two great meetings annually. Saint Andrews whether as regards its early importance in the history of Scotland, with which it is so intimately associated—its numerous relics of antiquity, which every where arrest the eye—its venerable religious edifices, and its seminaries of learning—must be admitted to be a place possessing undying excellence to the mind of the antiquary, and replete with interest to the well-informed historian, the contemplative tourist, and the casual visitor. The market is held on Monday; and the fairs on the second Thursday in April, the 1st of August (old style), and the 30th November (new style).

STRATHMIGLO is a parish and small town—the latter nearly two miles from Auchtermuchty, and six from the Falkland road station, on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee Railway, situated in a pleasant plain, on the north bank of the Miglo or Eden; and consists chiefly of two streets, with several lanes diverging from them. The town house stands about the centre of the principal street: it has a square steeple, at the top of which is a balcony surrounded by balu-strades, the whole being surmounted by a spire nearly eighty feet high; from the front of the steeple projects a stone pillar, which formerly served for a sun-dial, now much defaced; above this are the arms of the house of Buthrie. By charter, in 1600, the detached portions or feus were erected into a burgh of barony, and this grant was confirmed by James VI, in 1605, but the nomination of baillies and admittance of burgesses was vested in the person of the superior.

 Within the last sixty years, a village has been built on the opposite side of the Miglo, called the Fens of Wester-Cash. Between the old town and this new village is a beautiful square and level meadow, called the Town-green, intersected by the Miglo, and belonging to the burgh. There is but little trade belonging to the place—that which it does enjoy is of the nature with the staple of the county,—bleaching and linen weaving. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a free church, and two presbyterian chapels. The first mentioned is a plain building, standing at the entrance of the town. A fair is held at Strathmiglo on the last

TORRYBURN WITH NEWMILLS, CARNOCK, OAKLEY AND CAIRNEYHILL.

TORRYBURN is a parish and village—the latter 17 miles s. w. from Kirkcaldy, 6 e. from Kincardine, 44 w. from Dunfermline, and 2 e. from Kelross; seated on Crombie point, a promontory on the firth, and two miles and a half from the Oakley station, on the Stirling and Dunfermline line. The situation of the village is pleasant and salubrious, and the inhabitants, who are remarkable for their peaceable disposition and industrious habits, are chiefly employed in weaving and some of the females are engaged in embroidering sewed muslins. From the rocky state of the shore it has been found impossible to form a harbour here; but a pier has been erected at Crombie point, where passengers and goods are landed, and at which steam boats touch in going to Alloa and Stirling. The parish lies at the south west corner of the county, and extends along the shore of the Frith of Forth, between the parish of Dunfermline on the east, and that of Culross on the west, and measures from four to five miles in length; by about two in breadth. The parish, which is formed by the union of the baronies of Torry and Crombie, derives its name from the Gaelic word Torry, signifying the 'King's Height,' and burn, the Scottish word for rivulet. Within the boundary of the parish and adjacent to Torryburn village, is that of NEWMILLS; which for trade, or otherwise, demands no particular notice. A fair is held at Torryburn on the second Wednesday in July.

CARNOCK parish lies to the north of Torryburn—the village being situated 4 miles w. from Dunfermline; there is no business of consequence carried on here, but the parish contains coal in abundance. A church of the establishment, and a free church, are the places of worship.

OAKLEY and CAIRNEYHILL are two villages in the parish of Carnock—the first named, which is about a mile from Carnock village, has sprung into existence since the year 1846, owing to the establishment of the 'Forth Iron Works. The ore and fuel are raised at the works, and six furnaces are continually in operation in smelting; and two engines employed, of the power respectively of two hundred horses. Schools have been opened by the proprietors for the children of their work-people. The railway before-mentioned passes close to the works. CAIRNEYHILL village is situated on the road between Alloa and Dunfermline, 3 miles w. from the latter town; and the majority of the inhabitants are employed by the manufacturers of that place.

WEMYSS (EAST & WEST), BUCKHAVEN & METHIL.

EAST WEMYSS, in the parish of its name, is five miles from Kirkcaldy, and four from Dysart, (at which latter is the nearest railway station); situated on the Frith of Forth, and consists principally of a single street. In this village the manufacture of linen fabrics is carried on rather extensively; and a brewery and malting-house are the other branches. Free and established churches are in the village.

About one mile westward is the village of WEST WEMYSS, a burgh of barony, having a harbour at its western extremity, and several vessels belonging to it employed in the exportation of coal, which is wrought close to the harbour. A short way, east of the village, on the brink or face of an eminence, and surrounded on the land side by beautiful plantations and pleasure grounds, is Wemyss House, the seat of Admiral Wemyss; and within the parish is the ancient Castle of Wemyss, now a ruin. This massive structure crowns the height above the shore, commanding a most extensive view seaward; it has the reputation of being one of the castles of the Macduffs, Earls of Fife. Near the castle are several extensive excavations at the base of the bank, partly natural and partly artificial—one of these caves is called the 'King's Cave.' At the village of BUCKHAVEN, one mile east from Wemyss, a new harbour has been constructed, for the accommodation of boats on the fishery station, which is the most considerable on this coast. The expense of this great improvement, exceeded £8,000. This village, as well as that of the decayed town of METHIL, are principally inhabited by fishermen and weavers: at the latter is a small harbour, and fish-curing is carried on at BUCKHAVEN. A fair is held at Wemyss, on the second Wednesday in September.

FORFARSHIRE,

OR ANGUS.—This county is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, on the west by Perthshire, on the north by the counties of Aberdeen and Kincardine, the latter lying also on its north-eastern verge; on the south, the Firth of Tay is its boundary, as likewise is Perthshire for a short distance: its extent from north to south is about thirty-seven miles, and from east to west nearly forty. The figure of this county is, perhaps, the most uniform of any in Scotland; and but for an indentation on its western side, caused by the intrusion of a part of Perthshire, it would describe almost a perfect square. The contents of its area has been variously estimated: the government returns for 1841 stated it to contain 892 square miles, or 568,320 statute acres; of these there are about three hundred thousand cultivated, and two hundred and sixty thousand uncultivated; the portion occupied by lakes is inconsiderable.

EARLY HISTORY.—The district of ANGUS (now Forfarshire), with the contiguous county of Kincardine on the north, anciently formed the country of the Foresti, and a portion of the Pictish kingdom. On the dissolution of that government by Kenneth II. about the end of the ninth century, he is said to have divided it between his two brothers, Angus and Mearns, from whom the two counties derived their appellation. The district gave the title of Earl to two different families: on the extinction of the first, the earldom was conferred on a relation of King David Bruce; and in 1477 it merged in the family of the Douglasses: it has since devolved on the Duke of Hamilton. There are a number of old ruinous castles in this county, most of which have fallen to decay, in consequence of the baronies on which they stand having passed into the hands of proprietors of other estates.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND PRODUCE.—The great level valley of Strathmore runs through the centre of the county from east to west; and the lines of hills which flank this extensive and fine tract of country, with the Grampians on the north, and some minor ranges on the south, may be said to form this district into a series of continuous ridges, generally pursuing a direction from west to east, interrupted occasionally by the different rivers and streams coursing to the sea. The eminences of greatest altitude in this shire are—Hill of Dundee, 525; Dunnichen Hill, 720; Belmont, 759; Sidlaw, 1,406; Craigowl, 1,600; Oathlaw, one of the Grampians, 2,261; and Mount-Battock, 3,465 feet above the level of the sea. The portion of the Grampian mountains in this shire is diversified by many beautiful valleys; and from the summit of these elevations to the ocean on the east, and the Tay on the south, the surface of the land may be considered an inclined plane. From the aerial region of the highest Grampian an extensive and well-varied prospect is presented, not only of almost the whole country adjoining the Tay, and of the ocean, but of the eastern part of the peninsula of Fife, the coast of East Lothian, and the heights of Lammermoor. The capabilities of Forfarshire for agriculture continued for centuries in that dormant state which characterised most other parts of Scotland; but it cannot escape observation, at the present day, that this district is completely emancipated from the reproach of inattention to husbandry; that it now exhibits a lively spirit and practically enlightened system of farming, and consequently a just appreciation of the advantages of this most useful of all sciences. Within the last fifty years, the farmers of this county have kept at least equal pace, in the improvements adopted, with those of similarly situated divisions of the country; and the wealth of Forfarshire has been steadily increasing, both from its agricultural and its manufacturing products. The general drainage of the land has been proceeded in to a great and beneficial extent; and several lochs, particularly that of Rescobie, have been drawn off, for the purpose of obtaining shell-marl, which has long been in high repute with the agriculturists in their respective neighbourhoods: the introduction of bone manure has been followed by the most profitable results. The sowing of permanent pasture grasses and turnips is persevered in to a broad and lucrative amount; and the quantity of ground appropriated to tillage is annually augmenting. The improvement of live stock has been in proportional advance with that of cultivation, and has been materially facilitated by the zealous co-operation of the various agricultural societies. In traversing the lower parts of the shire, beautiful enclosures and plantations meet the eye in every parish; and by the formation of excellent roads, in all directions, a pleasing inducement is now held for travelling through this progressively prospering county. The planting of waste lands in this county seems to have made very little progress till about the middle of the last century, and when, at length, this sure source of future profit suggested itself, Scotch firs were the only sort of trees planted in such situations. More recent planters introduced the larch, as a more valuable species of timber, and adapted, as they thought, to every variety of soil and situation, but experience has now exploded this latter notion; for, it has been profitably proved that, by the operation of draining, the moors and waste lands produce excellent oak and beech, of which a number of proprietors have been for some time planting extensively. From the mouth of the Tay to near the Westhaven, the coast is sandy—having, from thence eastward, many sunken rocks. Within a mile to the east of Arbroath the shore becomes bold and rocky, presenting dreadful precipices to the sea, perforated with caverns by the incessant and insidious workings of the waves: the ‘Redhead,’ a promontory upwards of two hundred feet in perpendicular height, is the most striking feature of this rocky front; it forms the south point of Lunan Bay, and exposes a beautiful beach to the ocean for nearly three miles. The fisheries of Forfarshire are of great importance; those of the North and South Esk, and the coast of the county, are at the present time very valuable; and the mode of packing salmon in boxes of ice, for the London market, is a practice which has proved of peculiar advantage to those connected with that branch of the fishery.

MANUFACTURES AND MINERALS.—The manufactures of Forfar are of very high consequence; and, as Fifehire is celebrated for the production of the finer linen fabrics, so is this county noted for the manufacture of the coarser hempen goods, wrought up from foreign materials: the spinning of yarn in large mills is carried on to a prodigious extent. Dundee, Arbroath and Montrose are its principal trading ports: the two first named enjoy pre-eminence in the making of sailcloths, Osnaburghs, sackings, dowlases, and other linen textures; Brechin participates largely with other places in the preparation of flax; and the towns of Forfar, Montrose and Kerriemuir are seats of material manufacturing importance. Exclusive of these particular stations, the inhabitants of all the little towns and villages are industriously employed in weaving the already prepared materials into cloth, and in the process of bleaching. This county is not distinguished for its mineral treasures. Of limestone, which is found in various parts, there are immense tracts in the Grampians; but, from the expense of conveying coal to burn it, this natural product, so valuable under other circumstances, is not wrought to any extent, except in the neighbourhood of Montrose, at Buddin (on the north side of Lunan Bay), and in the vicinity of Brechin. Freestone is plentiful in almost every parish; the colour is various, but in no instance so white and beautiful as the stone of Fife or Mid-Lothian. The Arbroath paving-stone is well known, and has a ready sale in London and Edinburgh. Lead has been found in several places, and was at one time wrought to a limited amount in the parish of Lochlee. But, unfortunately for its local interests, this county is destitute of coal—at least no vestige of this invaluable fossil has yet been discovered: the whole district is, therefore, dependant on the Fife and Newcastle collieries for this essential article of domestic comfort and manufacturing facility.

RIVERS, LOCHS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers are the NORTH and SOUTH ESK, which rise near each other on the northern confines of the county; the former originates from Loch Lee, which is filled by the water of the Lee, after being joined by the Unich, which latter forms several beautiful cascades. The tributaries of the North Esk are the Luther, the Cruick, the West Water, the Tarf, and the Mark; enriched with these streams, it falls into the sea three miles from Montrose. The South Esk passes through the centre of the county, receiving in its progress the contributory waters of the Noran, the Lemo, the Carity, and the Prosen; and enters the ocean at Montrose. The third river in point of size is the ISLA, which rises near the sources of the Esks: it receives, near Meikle, the Dean—the Carleet, a little above Glammis—and the romantic burn of Glammis, near the castle; and, turning westward into Perthshire, it joins the Tay at Kinclaven. There are also two lesser rivers, the DIGHTY and the LUNAN: the former proceeds from some small lakes in the parish of Lundie, and falls into the mouth of the Tay, east from Broughty-ferry; the latter conveys the water of the lakes of Rescobie and Balgives to the sea, at Lunan Bay: the Lunan is famous for its eels, and the other rivers abound with different variations of the trout and salmon. In the enumeration of rivers yielding wealth to this county, the Tay must not be omitted (though this district cannot claim its origin), being by far the most valuable, from its adaptation to the purposes of commerce: it has its source in the western extremity of Perthshire, and after winding through delightful scenery, the beauties of which are heightened by its sparkling waters, it becomes an estuary or firth; and about eight miles below Dundee it expands into the bay of St. Andrews, and loses its distinction in the wide reservoir of the German Ocean. The lakes of most consequence are Loch Lee, in the parish of its name; Loch Brandy, in the parish of Clova; the Loch of Forfar, near that town; the Lochs of Roscobie, of Lundie, and Lentrathen, in the respective parishes so denominated; and of Balgives, in the parish of Aberlemno. None of these are of great magnitude—indeed few, if any, are more than a mile in extent; and there is nothing peculiar in their qualities or situations. Forfarshire is included in an extensive line of railway communication—and it may be said that every town of note in the shire is visited by a main line or branch from it: they are, the Dundee and Arbroath; the Dundee and Perth; the Dundee and Aberdeen Junction; the Dundee and Newtyle; the Aberdeen and Forfar; the Arbroath and Forfar; the Scottish Midland, &c.

DIVISIONS, &c.—Forfarshire comprises fifty-two complete parishes, and four parts of parishes; in which are five royal and parliamentary burghs, namely, Dundee, Arbroath, Montrose, Brechin, and Forfar: the four last-named burghs, with Inverbervie (in Kincardineshire), unite in sending one member to the senate; the town of Dundee also returns one, and the county at large another.

ABERLEMNO, CARESTON, FEARN, MENMUIR,

STRICKATHROW AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ABERLEMNO parish lies on the banks of the South Esk, where it is joined by the rivulet called the Lemno, and about twelve miles from the sea-coast. The land is undulating and fertile, and agriculture is pursued with spirit and success. In the parish churchyard, which is about six miles south-west from Brechin, is an antique obelisk, covered with hieroglyphics, erected to commemorate a signal victory obtained over the Danes near this place.

The small parish of CARESTON (or Caraldston) lies between Brechin and Tannadice, on the north bank of the South Esk and of the Noran water. The land is composed of beautiful well-cultivated tracts, sloping to the south. In the parish are two artificial mounds; one is said to have been raised for judicial deliberations, the other for the execution of capital offenders.

FEARN (or Fern) parish lies at the foot of some of the Grampian hills, intersected by the Cruick water, and bound on the south by that of the Noran. The surface presents rich pastoral hills, and low grounds finely cultivated and enclosed; with extensive plantations of fir and other timber. Near the Noran stands the formerly celebrated 'Vain Castle,' now a ruinous empty skeleton; it is about six miles west of Brechin.

ARBROATH.

FORMERLY called Aberbrothock, is a royal burgh, a sea-port and the seat of a presbytery; 60 miles N.E. from Edinburgh, 17 S.S.E. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Forfar, and 12 S. from Montrose; situated on a small plain, on the coast of the German ocean, and surrounded on the west, north and east by eminences, in an amphitheatric form. This is a town of early origin, owing its rise to an important monastic institution, founded here by William the Lion, about the year 1178: the remains of this edifice are strikingly picturesque, and consists of ruinous towers of the most solid construction, columns overthrow and broken in pieces, Gothic windows, cloisters, staircases, &c.; all exhibiting the ravages of time. The church of this abbey has been a most magnificent fabric; a part of the abbot's lodgings, which stands a little distance from the church, still remains. The monks first came from Kelso, and Reginaldus (a monk of Tyron), was its first abbot. The abbots of this foundation had privileges which others did not enjoy—they were exempted from assisting at the yearly synods, and had the distinction of making use of, and wearing the pontifical ornaments. King Robert the Bruce granted ten marks sterling to the abbey; and King John conferred on the inhabitants of the place the same privileges that his subjects enjoyed throughout all England, except in his city of London.

The town consists of one main street, nearly half a mile in length, running north and south from the sea, and several parallel ones that intersect others at right angles. Eastward of the town, and locally in the parish of Saint Vigens, there are several elegant streets, at the top of one of which a chapel of ease is erected; on the west side of the river Brothock are also other streets of modern erection, consisting chiefly of small houses, forming a suburb of considerable size. A new town-house, which was erected in 1812, and the trades'-hall (in Horner's-s-wynd), add much to the beauty of the town; the streets have also been greatly improved, and are daily improving, by the addition of elegantly fitted and well-supplied shops. At the commencement of the eighteenth century Arbroath had no other trade than that of fishing, nor did it claim any notice as a place of manufacture. Nothing was then directly imported except a small cargo of wood occasionally from Norway; flax, iron and other useful commodities, were purchased from the merchants of Dundee and Montrose. About the year 1738, the manufacture of coarse linens was introduced by the following accident; a weaver in the town, having a small quantity of flax, unfit for the kind of cloth then usually brought to market, made it into a web, and offered it to another of the inhabitants at a price by which he was willing to be a loser; the purchaser, having previously been in Germany, remarked a similarity between this piece of cloth and the manufacture of Osnaburgh, and prevailed upon the weaver to make trial of other webs of the same texture; the experiment succeeded—a company was established, and other parts of the county soon availed themselves of the discovery. The staple of Arbroath, at the present day, is the manufacture of sail cloth, canvass and other coarse liens; the preparation and spinning of the yarns for these productions of the loom is carried on most extensively, by numerous individuals and firms of the first respectability. In addition to these important branches, there are various other concerns of magnitude, including two iron foundries, a number of ship-building yards (with a patent slip), two extensive tanneries, roperies, several breweries, &c.; and a considerable trade exists in the exportation of grain. The number of vessels belonging to the port is about one hundred and twenty, of an aggregate burthen of fifteen thousand tons. The harbour is commodious, having been lately much enlarged at a cost of £50,000, which sum was chiefly raised amongst its merchants and spirited inhabitants. It is provided with a neat signal-tower for communication with the Bell (or Luch Cape) Rock, rising from the German ocean, about twelve miles in a south-eastern direction from Arbroath. Of this rock, and the tradition attached to it, a most entertaining account will be found in Messrs. Chambers's 'Gazetteer.' On 'the rock' is a lighthouse, the first stone of which was laid in July, 1808, and the beacon first gleamed over the deep on the 1st February, 1811. At the lighthouse there are a principal light-keeper and three assistants; each, in his turn, goes on shore at the end of every six weeks, with liberty to remain a fortnight: in the town there are buildings erected where each keeper has apartments for the accommodation of his family; and connected with the establishment is a very neat signal-tower in the harbour; this structure is fifty feet in height, and furnished with an excellent telescope; and signals are arranged with the persons at the lighthouse for the attending vessel, the master of which has charge of the signal-tower and of the stores at Arbroath. The monetary transactions of the place are facilitated by three banking establishments—branches respectively of the 'British Linen Company,' the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and the 'Western Bank of Scotland'; and there is a bank for savings, well sustained by many provident depositors. There are several excellent inns—of these the 'Abbey Inn,' the 'Albion Hotel,' the 'Market-place Inn' and the 'Trades' Hall Tavern,' may be properly mentioned as affording the accommodation required by the various visitors. There are several respectably attended news-rooms, and a well selected subscription library.

Arbroath is a very ancient royalty; but there is no certainty as to the origin of its burghal privileges, in consequence of the loss of charters; in the incessant troubles which disordered the state during the minority of James VI.: it is the general opinion, however, that the town was constituted a royal burgh by the same monarch that founded its celebrated abbey. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a dean of guild and twelve town councillors; and it has seven incorporated trades. It unites with Forfar, Montrose and Brechin in sending one member to the imperial parliament. A police or justice court is held weekly, for the trial of petty offences, and a sheriff's court every alternate month, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £6. 6s. 8d.

There are no fewer than sixteen places of worship in the town and suburbs of Arbroath; their names, denominations and respective sites, with the ministers officiating, are given at a subsequent page. An elegant steeple one hundred and fifty feet in height was, not many years since, added to the church. There are several excellent public educational establishments in Arbroath, including the 'Arbroath Academy,' church schools, a subscription one, another under the 'Benevolent Society,' two 'Educational Institutions' and some private academies, for either sex, of great respectability. The market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the last Saturday in January, for general business and hiring servants; on the first Saturday after Whit-Sunday for hiring, July 18th (if it fall on a Saturday, if not, on the following Saturday), for general business and hiring; and the first Saturday after Martinmas for hiring.

AUCHTERHOUSE, LIFF AND BENVIE, LUNDIE, MAINS,

STRATHMARTIN, MURROES, AND TEALING.

THE parish of AUCHTERHOUSE lies in the south-west corner of the country, about 7 miles N. W. from Dundee, and on the south of the Sidlaw hills. The road from Dundee to Meikle (in Perthshire), passes through the parish, which comprises four thousand acres, chiefly of arable land.

LIFF AND BENVIE is an united parish, the latter incorporated with the former in 1758. The district, which lies immediately west of Dundee, with a portion touching the Tay, is generally well cultivated, and beneath the surface, freestone and slate abound. There are, within the parishes, the village of LIFF, BENVIE, INVERGOWRIE, and LOCHEE.

LUNDIE parish lies in the western part of the county: the parish of Foulis-Easter, in Perthshire, was united to it in 1618. Conjointly the district forms a productive well-cultivated tract of country; embellished with plantations, and irrigated by several small lakes, of which Lundie loch is one. The church of Foulis, which was founded by Sir Andrew Gray for a provost and some prebendaries, is still perfectly entire, although it was built in the year 1142.

MAINS (or Mains of Fintry), formerly called Strath-dighty, is a parish lying immediately north of that of Dundee, and chiefly in the vale of the river Dighty, which intersects the parish into two nearly equal parts in its course to the Tay. From the banks of the stream the ground rises gently to the north and south; and the country has a most pleasant aspect, being well enclosed with thorn hedges, and ornamented with fine trees and thriving plantations. On the Dighty are several mills; and near the left bank of the river is the extensive bleachfield of Claverhouse—at no great distance from which was the seat of General Grahame, whose title of 'Claverhouse' (applied from this his patrimonial estate) once sounded such alarm in Scotland. The Grahames of Fintry were one of the oldest families in this part of the country. Freestone and slate quarries supply some occupation in this parish. The small parish of STRATHMARTIN is now united to that of Mains.

MURROES (or Muirhouse) parish is in the southern part of the county, bounded by Dundee on the south and Monifieth on the east; lying on the road from Brechin to Dundee, from which latter it is about five miles distant. The greater part of the parish is arable, and it is now adorned with some plantations.

TEALING parish, lies on the south side of the Sidlaw chain; is about four miles in length, and from one to two in breadth, and is watered by the small river Fishie, a tributary stream to the Dighty. In this parish are found grey slate, moorstone and freestone. John Glass, founder of the sect appropriately denominated 'Glassites,' was minister of Tealing anterior to his open separation from the church of Scotland,

BARRIE, CARNOUSTIE, PANBRIDE, MUIRDRUM,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BARRIE (or Barry) is a parish and village—the latter is situated 10 miles E. from Dundee, and not quite that distance S.W. from Arbroath, on the road from the latter town to Broughy. The parish is sandy, and abounds with tumuli, indicative of the visits and conflicts of the northern invaders on this coast. Along the shore are placed light-houses, to guide vessels on their entrance into the Tay. B. sides Barrie, there is within the parish the thriving village of CARNOUSTIE, where are manufactured coarse linens for houses in Dundee and Arbroath.

PANBRIDE parish lies at the mouth of the Frith of Tay: in its northern part stands the house of Panmure, with its extensive enclosures and plantations; near the house are vaults and foundations of the old castle of Panmure, long the seat of the earls of that title. The inhabitants of this parish, with the exception of those of the village of MUIRDRUM (who are employed in weaving), are principally engaged in fishing. The parish is watered by a streamlet that runs through a valley called 'Battie's Den,' over which is thrown a high bridge, on the turnpike road from Dundee to Arbroath. The coast is flat and rocky, but has two open harbours at the East and West Havens, where small vessels may discharge their cargoes in mild weather.

Besides the East and West Havens, there are the villages of Panbride, Skrine, and Muirdrum, at the latter of which is a post-office, a branch from Carnoustie.

ing at a quarter before six, and afternoon at five, and are de-patched at seven in the morning and half-past four in the afternoon

BRECHIN is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish; 70 miles N. from Edinburgh, 27 N. N. E. from Dundee, 25 S. S. W. from Stonehaven, between 12 and 13 N. E. from Forfar, and 8 W. by N. from Montrose; situated at the side of a hill, the foot of which is washed by the South Esk, and on the Aberdeen railway, for which line there is a station here. The town consists of one main street, with several smaller ones diverging; the principal is about a mile in length, extending from the north part to the picturesque bridge of two arches. Some of the streets, particularly about the Cross, are remarkably steep. Brechin more than once suffered by the incursions of invaders and the broils of civil war; it was burnt by the Dames in 1012, and in 1645 it was subjected to a similar calamity by the Marquis of Montrose; two years afterwards it was nearly depopulated by that dreadful scourge the plague. Formerly the town was walled; but the gates have been long removed, and in the present day it exhibits the appearance of a well-built thriving place.

Flax spinning, and the manufacture of linens, employ numerous hands. There are two manufactories for tobacco, and two distilleries upon a large scale; malt is the basis of the spirit produce from the latter. A branch of the 'British Linen Company's Bank,' and another of the 'Western Bank of Scotland,' are established here, and there is also a 'savings' bank. Three principal inns are in the town,—of these the 'Brechin Inn and Commercial Hotel' is an extensive and commodious establishment. A newspaper, published here on Tuesday morning, entitled the 'Brechin Advertiser,' is conducted with much talent. The antiquity of Brechin as a royal burgh is of remote date; it is governed by a provost, two bailies a dean of guild, treasurer, hospital master, and seven other councillors. The burgh joins with Forfar, Montrose, Arbroath, and Inverurie, in returning one member to parliament. A burgh or bailie court is held every Wednesday—the bailies are the judges.

In ancient times an Abbey of Culdees existed here; and in 1150, when Brechin was constituted an episcopal see by David I., it is supposed that the site of this establishment was that selected for the foundation of the cathedral. An interesting fragment remains of the ancient chapel of the Maison Dieu. The cathedral of St. Ninian, which now forms the parish church, stands on the north verge of a precipitous ravine, which separates the burgh lands from those of Brechin castle; it was originally a stately Gothic structure, but its architectural symmetry has been materially injured by the injudicious taste displayed in modern repairs; the length is one hundred and sixteen feet, and the breadth sixty-one; the steeple is a square erection, seventy feet in height, surmounted by a hexagonal spire of fifty feet. The cathedral of Brechin was one of the few places of worship in Scotland in which the service of the liturgy was for some time performed without interruption, after its promulgation in 1637; the bishop was a man of singularly strong and daring character, and ascended the pulpit with a pair of pistols under his gown, determined to carry the behests of royalty into execution at whatever risk. The other places of worship are two han some free churches, three united pre-byterian, an original secession and a Scottish episcopal. Contiguous to the cathedral stands the tall slender tower of Brechin, which, like its prototype at Abernethy, and numerous others in Ireland, has puzzled so many antiquaries as to the object of its erection. It is an unadorned turret of freestone, eighty-five feet in eight to the cornice, and fifteen feet more to the pinnacle of the modern spire on its top; it has several windows (four in particular, at the top, facing the cardinal points), but, like the tower of Abernethy, has no stair within. The entrance to the tower is by a door near the ground, on the outside which was built up, but has lately been re-opened, and the whole edifice repaired by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. Numerous figures in an antique style of carving, and a rude representation of the Crucifixion, are the surrounding ornaments of the door. The diameter of the tower at the bottom, is sixteen feet. Between the town and the river, and only separated from the former by the ravine before-mentioned, stands Brechin Castle, the ancient seat of the Maules of Panmure, now the property and residence of the Right Hon. Lord Panmure; it is built on a precipitous rock overhanging the stream, and was formerly a fortress, having sustained a siege of twenty days, in 1303, from the English army under Edward I, but Sir Thomas Maule, its proprietor, being killed, it surrendered. The south front, towards the river, presents a confused mass of buildings, consisting of some remains of the original structure, with some more recent erections; the west front is formed with regularity, in the style of the seventeenth century, with round towers at the angles.

Brechin has the advantage of numerous educational seminaries, and these have stimulated even the humble classes to the acquisition of knowledge, which is ministered to them by means of several excellent public libraries, the volumes of which are in active demand. The chief architectural ornament of the town is the elegant building containing the principal schools, and the mechanics' institution. The front is in the Tudor style, with castellated parapet, ornamented with pinnacles; a fine tower rises in the centre to the height of eighty or ninety feet, from the summit of which there is an enchanting prospect. This elegant structure was erected at the sole cost of Lord Panmure, who also presented to the institution numerous valuable paintings, which grace the fine hall of the mechanics' institution. His lordship's munificence granted also £1,000 to be invested at interest, which yields about £40 a year, and is appropriated to enriching the library with books, and the support of courses of lectures; and the subscribers are entitled to the benefit of the whole, for the low payment of three shillings a year. This town has given birth to several individuals of genius and literary distinction, among whom may be enumerated—Matland, the laborious historian of Edinburgh and London; Dr. Gillies, the historian of Greece; and James Tytler, an eccentric and unfortunate person, well known for his contributions to the first edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' Trinity Muir, one mile north of the town, besides being the site of several great fairs, is resorted to by cricket and golf players, during the summer, and the spectators would enjoy both the games and the fine prospect much more if a few seats were provided for them. The market is held on Tuesday, and the fairs (held on Trinity Muir) the third Wednesday in April, the second Wednesday in June, the second Thursday in August, and the Tuesday before the last Wednesday in September. The great sheep, cattle, and horse fair (on Trinity Muir) commences on the second Wednesday in June, and continues for three days—this is one of the largest in Scotland. 'Croft' markets, for cattle, are held in town, and horse markets, also, towards the end of February and beginning of March.

EDZELL is a large parish, chiefly in this county and a small portion in Kincardineshire; it is fourteen miles in length, and approaches within six miles of Brechin. The ruins of the ancient castle of Edzell is the chief object of interest. A church of the establishment, and a parochial and a free church school are in the parish.

BROUGHTY-FERRY AND MONIFIETH.

BROUGHTY-FERRY is a considerable modern village, seated on the Frith of Tay, about four miles east from Dundee, nearly opposite to Ferry-Port-on-Craig, and on the Dundee and Arbroath railway. The place takes its name from the old ruined castle of Broughty, or Burgh-Tay ('the defence of the Tay'), situate at its eastern extremity, on a rocky eminence jutting into the water; the only remains of this castle are the fragments of a tower and some vestiges of the battlements. Broughty is divided into two districts, East Ferry and West Ferry—the former is in the parish of Monifieth; the latter in that of Dundee: it is regularly built, and contains several good houses, neatly fitted up for the accommodation of bathers during the summer months, when it is a place of some resort. Fifty or sixty years ago, the East Ferry comprised only a few fishermen's huts built along the beach; the population is now considerable. To the east end of the town are extensive sandy downs, where vast numbers of rabbits burrow; at the head of the downs, near the village, there is an icehouse for providing and preserving ice for exporters of salmon, in which branch of fishery many persons are here engaged. About half a mile to the north of Broughty-Ferry is Fort-hill, where were lately some remains of the fortifications erected by the English, in 1548, during the reign of Henry VIII. and regecy of the Earl of Arran, when they ravaged Dundee and the surrounding country; in 1550 the works on this hill, being surrendered to an allied army of Scots, Germans and French, under M. Des Thermes, were dismantled, and at the present day they present merely shattered relics, the plough having occasionally been driven over a part of the ground which they once covered. There are four places of worship, and several schools in the village.

The parish of MONIFIETH lies on the shore of the Frith of Tay, extending inland about four miles and a half; the name is understood to be derived from the Gaelic appellation of Monifith, or the 'stag moss.' The village of Monifieth is situated about two miles east from Broughty-Ferry, on a brae with a southern exposure, at no great distance from the sea; it contains two manufactures of machines, a flour and a flax-spinning mill. The church, though plain in appearance, is a conspicuous edifice, surrounded by a burying ground, containing a variety of finely carved antique tombstone, executed with a taste rarely seen in the cemetery of a humble village.

Is a neat market town, in the parish of that name ; 15 miles n.w. from Dundee, between 12 and 13 E. by N. from Perth, and 4½ miles from Blairgowrie. It is a station on the Scottish Midland railway, and pleasantly situated on the Isla, a few miles above its junction with the Tay, on the main roads from Dundee to Blairgowrie and from Perth to Forfar. A small stream, tributary to the Isla, divides the town into two parts; that portion which lies on the south of this rivulet is all that belongs to the county of Angus (or Forfar). In ancient times this place was the seat of an abbey of Cistercian monks, founded by Malcolm IV in 1164, and endowed with considerable revenues by that monarch; at the reformation this edifice was destroyed by a mob from Perth; its ruins are sufficient to indicate that it was an establishment of considerable magnitude; the remains occupy part of the site of a Roman camp, said to have been formed by the army of Agricola in his seventh expedition. The town is compact and well-built, and has the advantage of being lighted by gas, and considerable improvements have been made in the proximity of the railway station. The venerable steeple in Queen-street is used as a prison. The street heretofore called Abbey-street has changed its name to Queen-street, to perpetuate the remembrance of her majesty's transit through Coupar Angus in 1849. Considerable quantities of linen fabrics are manufactured here, and there is a plash mill and a tannery. There

DUNDEE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF INVERGOWRIE, BULLIONFIELD AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNDEE is an important royal burgh and sea-port, ranging along the north bank of the Firth of Tay, about twelve miles from its mouth; it is 43 miles N. from Edinburgh, 66 s.s.w. from Aberdeen, 29 s.w. from Montrose, 23 E. by N. from Perth, 17 s.w. from Arbroath, and 14 s. from Forfar. Several railway companies have their stations in the town, or contiguous to it—they are respectively for the 'Dundee and Edinburgh,' the 'Dundee and Perth,' the 'Dundee and Newtyle,' and the 'Dundee, Arbroath and North,' lines. The situation of this busy port is very beautiful: the noble river here forms a bay two miles broad, from the margin of which the town spreads itself over a gradual acclivity, ascending towards the base of a lofty and sheltering eminence, called 'Dundee Law,' the picturesque coast of Fifeshire forms the southern border of the Tay, and a steam ferry-boat effects an hourly communication between the opposite shores of the estuary.

The earliest authentic accounts of Dundee do not satisfy the inquirer as to the origin either of its name or its existence; tradition ascribes the latter to a vow of David Earl of Huntingdon, in the latter part of the twelfth century, which caused a church to be erected on the site occupied by the present edifice, in the Netherlands, to testify his gratitude for a signal deliverance from the perils of the sea. Be this as it may, the town was of sufficient consequence during the gross usurpation of Edward I. to be made the station of an English garrison; and in the course of the fierce struggle for the Scottish crown between that prince (nominally on behalf of Baliol) and Robert Bruce, Dundee was taken and retaken twice; in these operations the patriot Wallace took a conspicuous part; here, impelled to retaliate the atrocities of Edward's officers, he put to death the son of the English governor. The castle of Dundee becoming so formidable an annoyance when in possession of an enemy, an occurrence but too frequent, Bruce deemed it expedient to demolish it, and not a vestige of it now remains; its site was that of the present Castle-street. The town was destroyed in the reign of Richard II. of England, and it suffered a similar infliction when Edward VI. sat upon the English throne; but on each occasion it arose from its ashes, and resumed its rank among the principal Scottish towns—several times being pledged as a security for ransoms, and for the fulfilment of treaties. The oldest charter Dundee can boast of is one granted by Robert Bruce, recognising the burghal privileges conferred by William the Lion, brother to the Earl of Huntingdon mentioned above. In this place the reformed religion found some of its earliest and warmest defenders; so zealous was the town in its cause, as to be honoured with the appellation of 'the second Geneva' in 1544 the prophetic victim of Cardinal Beaton's ferocity, George Wishart, preached here; and in 1559 the provost, attended by a multitude of his townsmen, hastened to Edinburgh to assist in the siege of Leith, then in the possession of the French. In April, 1645, the notorious Duke of Montrose took Dundee by assault; it is affirmed that, during the pillage and slaughter which ensued, Montrose ascended to the top of the 'Law,' in order that his revenge might be satiated by witnessing the carnage that was being perpetrated below. The last calamity that befel this town was its capture and plunder by General Monk, soon after the battle of Worcester had placed Scotland within the gripe of the victorious Cromwell; but, as this dismal catastrophe is noticed hereafter, we shall close this brief narrative with the enumeration of a few eminent names that have conferred honour on Dundee, from its being the place either of their birth or education:—Sir William Wallace, the uncompromising patriot and heroic soldier; John Blair; Goldman and Ferguson, the poets; Sir George Mackenzie, the scholar and lawyer; and, in more recent days, Drs. Small, Willison, Davidson and Smith, each distinguished for literary talent and profound learning—and the naval victor, Admiral Duncan.

COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The stranger, approaching Dundee by the Newport ferry, is soon made aware of its commercial character by its fine harbour and extensive docks, crowded with shipping, and its noble quay; on the other hand, the volumes of smoke, issuing from a forest of towering chimnies, render it equally apparent that Dundee is likewise a great manufacturing town. The rapid increase, both of its productions and shipping, is indeed amazing. When the memorable sacking of Dundee was perpetrated by Monk, in 1651, sixty vessels were found in the harbour, so richly laden as to afford a booty to the captors exceeding in value the whole of their spoil 'in the wars throughout the three nations;' but this ill-gotten plunder was no sooner obtained than lost, for the ships sunk in passing the bar; so that, although those inhabitants who had deposited their valuables on board were ruined, their plunderers were not enriched. The subsequent massacre of the brave defenders of the town, and the decapitation of its governor, Lumsden, are well known historical facts. This heavy blow crushed its rising commerce, and for several years few vessels floated in the deserted harbour: however, in 1669, thirty-seven vessels arrived in this port; in 1673, forty-nine; in 1680, eighty-five; but in 1731 the number had considerably decreased, and the trade continued to dwindle till this once flourishing port was resorted to chiefly by fishermen and smugglers, as before-mentioned. But the happy situation of Dundee, the commodiousness of its harbour, and the enterprise of its inhabitants, formed a too felicitous combination of circumstances to allow the extinction of her trade to be perpetual: the tide of commerce turned, and once more set into the forsaken haven; and the following official statements will exhibit the commercial eminence to which progressive prosperity has enabled this port to attain:—In 1745 the port dues scarcely amounted to £1,200; but in 1792 the number of vessels belonging to the town had increased to 116, measuring 8,550 tons; and about the same period the foreign clearances outwards and inwards, were nearly 12,000 tons, and the coasting trade about 61,000. This augmentation of its shipping gave an impulse to improvement: new sea walls and quays were built, the tide harbour was extended, wet docks and a graving dock were constructed, and such mighty undertakings were effected that there are only two or three ports in Great Britain which now afford greater facilities and accommodation for shipping. In 1815 the management of the harbour was placed in the hands of commissioners, appointed annually under an act of parliament; but by a new act, passed in June, 1830, the management was transferred to trustees to be elected annually; the provost, bailies and dean of guild to be perpetual trustees, in virtue of their office:—

The total expenditure for constructing and maintaining the harbour, from July, 1815, to May, 1850, inclusive of interest on debt and sinking fund, was.....	£756,893	2	10

" 1850..... " 3,815.....	"	299,048	"

The number of vessels registered at the port in 1850 was 346, of the aggregate register of 57,907 tons. The whale fishery employs several ships, from this port, though it is not carried on to the extent it was formerly; but steam navigation is successfully conducted by several ral enterprising companies. The steam-ships between Dundee, London and Leith have obtained a high character for swiftness and excellent accommodation: there are also two that run between Perth and Dundee. The earliest articles manufactured in the town seem to have been soap and glass, which engaged a great number of hands; and the brewing of ale was carried on to some extent. The business of building ships appears likewise to have flourished here at an early period, and such an occupation soon led to the manufacture of cordage, which remains still a branch of commerce. The manufacture of cotton was once tried here, and had the appearance of forming an important branch in the trade of Dundee, having, at one time, seven companies engaged in it; but at length it declined, and finally died away, in favour of Glasgow. The manufacture of woollen cloths was next attempted to be established, but met with no success. Out of these failures arose a spirit for manufacturing goods from flax; and, as an encouragement to this branch, in its infancy, a bounty was given by government, on all linen exported, and a heavy duty laid on the importation of foreign linens. By these enactments the trade of Dundee increased to a great extent, and has kept pace with that of its shipping. The following shows the amount of

1791, flax .....	2,444 "
" hemp .....	299 "
1835, flax .....	9,939 "
" hemp .....	6,213 "
" flax codilla .....	5,330 "

" flax codilla .....	9,133 "
" hemp .....	1,062 "
" hemp codilla .....	18 "
" jute .....	8,127 "

The exports of linens and sailcloth were:—

1836 .....	710,944 "

Forty years ago, there were only four steam spinning mills; there are now upwards of forty. The various productions from flax and hemp form the staple of the town: the raw material is imported chiefly from Russia, Prussia and Holland; this is spun by steam-power into thread, which, after being bleached, is woven into Osnaburghs, sheetings, baggings, sailcloth, sacking and dowlas. During the year 1850, the trade of Dundee became animated by augmenting briskness, showing that free trade had increased the prosperity of this important port; the apparent declension during the year 1849 was owing to a considerable portion of the coasting trade being transferred to the railways—this was conspicuous in the transport of salmon, to the extent of three thousand boxes. The manufacture of machinery, steam-boilers, chain-cables and anchors, is carried on extensively; and ship-building is in great activity.

DESCRIPTIVE SKETCH OF DUNDEE.—Although Dundee is not conspicuous for beauty, and has not enlarged its dimensions in proportion to its increased population, it contains several handsome streets. The town is illuminated with gas, furnished by two companies, and is now abundantly supplied with good water, under the direction of an efficient company, formed a few years ago. The chief desideratum is a better sewerage, which would be followed by a multiplication of those private conveniences, the want of which throughout Scotland is so generally complained of by strangers, and which in England are deemed indispensable. The greater part of the mansions of the opulent are ranged on the lofty bank of the Tay, westward of the town; this situation commands a view of the majestic river, and the beautiful scenery on the opposite coast. The delightful lawn which forms the margin of the northern bank of the river, called 'Magdalen Green,' is much frequented as a promenade, and in summer it is appropriated to cricket and other athletic sports. The central point of the town is a wide oblong area, called High-street, on the south side of which stands the town-house, comprising the guildhall, the court-room, and appropriate offices, together with repositories for the town records. The town-house was finished in 1734, from a plan of the elder Adams; the front is very handsome, beneath which is a piazza; and from the centre of the building rises a lofty spire, 140 feet high. The trades' hall ornaments the eastern end of High-street; besides the apartments in which the nine incorporated trades hold their meetings, there is a large public reading-room within its arrangements. Castle-street (the site of the ancient castle), which runs from High-street towards the quay, contains an episcopal chapel and the theatre. The new Reform-street diverges from High-street in a northern direction, and is composed of very handsome houses and shops. Looking up this street, the elegant edifice called the 'Seminaries,' with its chaste Doric portico, forms a graceful terminating object: this tasteful structure was completed in 1834, at a cost of £10,000; it comprehends the burgh grammar school, and an academy, patronised by the corporation, designed to impart a liberal education to the pupils, including instructions in literature, science, and the ancient and modern languages. In addition to the above there are numerous public schools, and many private educational establishments.

The principal church of Dundee rears its huge and lofty tower westward of High-street. The church of which this tower is the remnant, was destroyed by fire a few years ago, but was rebuilt; and its dimensions are so capacious as to comprehend four distinct parochial churches within its walls. At the foot of the church tower, on its western side, is placed the ancient market cross, removed from High-street; it is a carved pillar, supporting an unicorn, who holds an armorial shield between his knees. The places of worship in Dundee, of all denominations, number forty-five—for the particulars of these, see the end of the directory—several are highly ornamental structures. Adjoining the fine church of St. Andrew is a meeting-house for the 'Glassites'—a secession of the religious world founded by Mr. John Glass, who, it appears, was made a freeman of Dundee by the town council, in 1753. Besides the burial grounds attached to several of the religious edifices, there are three extensive cemeteries, the inspection of which cannot fail to interest a stranger: the most recent, which is situated to the west of the Perth road, has a beautiful site, and is gracefully planted with shrubs and flowers. On passing through the arch over which the railway inclined plane of the Dundee and Newtyle line is carried, you arrive at the entrance to Dudhope Castle, now converted into a barrack, but originally the seat of the Scrymgeour family, standard-bearers to the Scottish kings, one of whom, after the restoration, was elevated to the peerage, by the title of Earl of Dundee; this mansion subsequently became the property of the reckless persecutor of the presbyterians, Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee. From the approach to this ancient mansion is a fine view of the new gaol, the plan of which admits of the classification of offenders. Adjoining the barrack is the public bleaching green.

In conjunction with the prominent buildings already mentioned, the Royal Infirmary, in King-street, should be particularised; it was opened in 1798, and has communicated all those blessings for which these benign institutions are designed. Not far distant from this house of mercy, at the east end of Cowgate, is the only fragment remaining of the ancient town-wall; it is an arch which bestrides the street, and is, perhaps, indebted for its continuance to a feeling of grateful veneration for the memory of the amiable martyr, George Wishart, who, from this gate, during the plague in 1544, preached to the infected, assembled on the outer side, and to the healthy on the inner; his text was, Psalm 107, verse 20, 'The Lord sent his word and healed them.' The Royal Lunatic Asylum, in the Forfar road, both for elegance and accommodation, will not suffer from a comparison with any kindred establishment in Scotland. The Royal Orphan Institution, founded in 1815, is an admirable charity; and so are many others which are enumerated in the list of 'Pullic Buildings, &c. At the western termination of the fine terrace, called Dock-street, overlooking the docks and harbour, is an elegant building, in the Grecian style, named the 'Exchange Coffee-rooms'; it was erected at an expense of £9,000, and contains spacious coffee and reading rooms, besides apartments for the transaction of mercantile business; access to these rooms is liberally permitted to every respectable stranger. Contiguous to this is a gorgeous arch, or rather a structure surmounting three arches; a capacious central one, and two of smaller dimensions at the sides. The style is Norman, and each front is richly sculptured with countless intersections of circular arches: two octagonal turrets rise from the summit. This costly monument was raised to commemorate the landing near this spot of Queen Victoria. Near this arch is the fish market, amply supplied with the various species of the finny tribes in season; the Dundee haddock is a peculiar favourite. From this locality, Union-street forms a communication with the Nether-gate, it contains excellent shops, and 'Thistle Hall,' much used for public meetings. The various banking establishments occupy buildings which likewise contribute to the embellishment of the town, as well as to the facilities of its trade. Four newspapers issue weekly from the press of Dundee, and maintain an increasing circulation: the 'Dundee, Perth and Cupar Advertiser,' published on Tuesday and Friday; the 'Dundee Courier,' on Wednesday; the 'Northern Warrier,' on Thursday; and the 'Dundee Commercial Journal,' on Saturday.

The MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT of Dundee is exercised by a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors. There are six courts held within the town—the burgh or bailie court, the sheriff's court, the commissary court, the guild court, the police court, and the justice of peace small debt court. The town is divided into three districts, and subdivided into eleven wards, for the convenience of the registration of the burgh electors. Dundee sends one representative to parliament.

The principal market days are Tuesday and Friday; and there is a cattle and sheep market held every Monday. Fairs:—Stobb's fair, for cattle, sheep and horses, on the 11th July, or the first Tuesday following (O.S.); Dundee first fair, for cattle, sheep and horses, on the 26th August—if that day falls on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday, if not the first Tuesday after the 26th of August (N.S.); and the second Dundee fair on the 19th September (the same rule observed as that regulating the first fair).

INVERGOWRIE is a village singularly situated, being partly in Perthshire and partly in Forfarshire, one portion being in the parish of Longforgan, the other in that of Liff; it is 3 miles from Dundee. There is a very neat free church, to which is attached a school. A fragment of an ancient church forms an interesting object, as a grave-yard surrounds it, in which are deposited the remains of several highly respectable persons; among others the Very Rev. Heneage Horsley, M.A., dean of Brechin and prebendary of St. Asaph, son of the renowned Dr. Horsley, bishop of St. Asaph; he died in 1847.

BULLIONFIELD, contiguous to the above, is in the parish of Liff, and contains the only paper mill in the county. Milnfield extensive stone quarry is in the vicinity, and gives employment to a great number of hands; adjoining it is the Invergowrie railway station, upon the Dundee and Perth line.
